Movie Poster Size Sleeves & Boards

Avoid protective sleeves made of polyethylene, polypropylene and polyvinyl chloride (PVC). Most of these plastics are coated with chemicals and contain additives that migrate into paper and cause premature aging. Even uncoated polypropylene emits gases that seep into paper. The only material which can actually preserve paper is uncoated, archival quality polyester film such as Mylar® D or Melinex® 516. BCE's Movie Gards™ are made entirely from Mylar® D. This exceptionally strong transparent film will resist moisture, pollutants, oils and acids, and has a life expectancy of hundreds of years.

Editorial

By Maggie Thompson

➽ Welcome to the only issue of CBG that will have numbers in sequence for some time: issue #1234. Next time around will be #12,345. As optimistic as I am about the wonders of medicine and science, I suspect I won't be editing that issue — so the staff and I have simply done the best we could with this one.

➽ The number-obsessed John Jackson Miller, by the way, is the one who first pointed out, not only the numeric sequence of this issue, but also that this issue apparently marks my 900th appearance in CBG. It's still fun, folks — thanks to you and to the delights of a field that never stops asking, "What if?"

➽ Heroes Con was delightful (and a chance to meet Chic Stone was cool enough, but I got to spend a couple of hours with Nick Cardy; I'd never met either of these pioneering artists before). Tony Isabella provides some memories on Page 38, and Peter David's column brings more convention moments on Page 82.

➽ Alert readers have already noticed that last issue we repeated Page 32 on Page 36. This meant that "Likes Best" ran twice and "Dislikes Most" (not to mention my reviews) didn't appear on Page 36, despite the listing on the contents page.

You don't need to know the complex computer foul-ups that occasioned the error. We'll just pass on the word that Brent says he threatened the CBG computer with a magnet, and it promised never to repeat such repetition again. (So it's redundant; what did you expect from a computer?) And "Likes" and "Dislikes" this week are on Pages 38 and 40 (in that order). And my reviews are on Page 40.

➽ Just as we were wrapping up this issue, Mark Evanier phoned to provide the schedule of the panels he discussed in CBG #1231 and #1232:

• Batman Panel: Friday 11:30 a.m. Planned panel members include Sheldon Moldoff, Dick Sprang, Winslow Mortimer, and Jim Mooney.

• Cartoon Voice Artists Panel: Saturday 11 a.m. Planned panel members include Rob Paulsen, Gregg Berger, Greg Burson, and Maurice La Marche.

• Golden Age Creators Panel: Saturday 1 p.m. Planned panel members include Gil Kane, Paul Norris, Bill Lignante, Ramona Fradon, Marie Severin, Al Williamson, and Winslow Mortimer.

• Jack Kirby Tribute: Saturday 4 p.m. Planned panel members include Marie Severin, Al Williamson, Dick Ayers, and Steve Gerber.

Mark your calendar, folks. If you don't know what I'm talking about, I'll remind you that Comic-Con International: San Diego will be held July 17-20. The official convention hotels are almost certainly filled by the time you get this issue, but don't let that stop you. There must be non-official con hotels that would serve. Let your fingers do the proverbial walking — and we'll see you there. While Mark's keen panels will certainly be terrific, they're not the only reason to come — and that should be enough to tell you the wonders that await.

Who will be the 12th JLA member?

Grant Morrison knows

By Matt Brady and Michael Doran

Comics fans love a mystery. Perhaps one of the biggest out there for DC fans today is: Who will be the 12th member of the Justice League? It's a secret JLA writer Grant Morrison has been delightedly tormenting JLA readers with for the past three months.

The membership now comprises: Superman, Batman, Wonder Woman, Green Lantern, Flash, Aquaman, Martian Manhunter, Green Arrow, and Aztek, who will soon get the boot from the team. Morrison's well-known additions to this line-up are: Captain Marvel, Plastic Man, and the angelic Zauriel (introduced in JLA #6), for a total of 11 members.

Zauriel

Originally, Morrison gave tantalizing hints about the 12th member, including that the new member has close ties to a former JLA member but has never been a member himself.

However, in a recent conversation about his JLA plans with Mark Waid, Waid reminded Morrison that his choice for a 12th member actually had held membership in the League, albeit shortly. "I actually hadn't seen the issues, but apparently he was a member, so I've led everybody up the wrong path," Morrison said.

With this said, Morrison's revised criteria for the mystery 12th member are as follows:

1. The new member's presence will cause strife within the team. "Complete consternation," he said.

2. The new member will update the League's technology. "A complete overhaul of their technology," Morrison said, "and, in the long term, the reason The Justice League exists."

3. The new member actually was a member of the League at an earlier date. "Oops," Morrison said.

Also, there is a fourth, unofficial criterion to consider for the new member: availability. While Morrison reported that editorial relationships are good with other series, it's fairly well known that there are a few offices which would like to keep their characters' continuity within their purview — for example, Denny O'Neil with Batman. Therefore, getting an editor to agree to let Morrison play with his or her character stands as an important criterion to consider.

Who are the front-runners for the coveted 12th seat? Considering the criteria, the field can be considerably narrowed. Without further ado, here's the short list.

• Blue Devil — Available and itching to be used since his "alteration" in Underworld Unleashed, when Neron amplified his powers and appearance. He has been on the team previously and, with his mystic/demonic connection, he could conceivably revamp the League's technology in a mystico-organic kind of way.

As for strife, he wasn't pleased at the cost of his increased powers in Underworld, so he could add a sullen, loose-cannon feel to the team.

Morrison: "I've never liked Blue Devil. No chance."

• The Ray — Available, and a strong candidate on two counts. He was a member of the team for a period of time and, as a natural whiz with computers, he could conceivably update the team's technology to a light-based information system. As for causing strife on the team? Ray did join with Captain Atom's pro-active, militaristic Extreme Justice team, which may not have sat too well with current, more middle-of-the-road Leaguers. Also, the current League already has Greens Lantern and Arrow, two young, green (no pun intended) heroes. Who wants a third?

Morrison: "Another interesting one. I'd put The Ray in if he gets a super-hero costume. I want to get away from super-heroes in jackets, because that was a real '80s and early '90s kind of thing."

• Captain Atom — Available? Perhaps. Captain Atom played a fair role in Kingdom Come, and, with the Kingdom series (set in DC future continuity, by the way) on the horizon, Kingdom writers Mark Waid and Brian Augustyn may have dibs on him. However, he does fit the other criteria nicely: His quantum powers could be used to update the League's technology at the atomic level, he's been in the League before, and he caused nothing but strife when he was around. On one hand, he could be too volatile a choice. On the other hand, Morrison said he does want a collection of titans on his team. Who better to represent the Atomic Age hero than Captain Atom?

Morrison: "He doesn't really fit in. He's Charlton's Superman, and it's kind of difficult to integrate him with our Superman. He just reeks of '60s Charlton to me."

• The Atom — A long-time Leaguer, The Atom could revise JLA technology at the subatomic level and serve as the Watchtower's resident scientist. Also, Ray Palmer's recent de-aged status could make more conservative JLAers reluctant to have a teen-ager on their roster, causing tension within the ranks. However, The Atom's availability is questionable, considering his current role as leader of The Teen Titans.

Morrison: "He's another character I'd like to do something with. One of the mistakes that's been made with The Atom is that they tried to make him a headliner, when he's actually a specialist. And I want to play him like that, because he's a scientist who can shrink and actually explore the quantum world, but sometimes he does super-hero stuff. That's the angle we'd go for there."

• Booster Gold and/or Blue Beetle — The comedy duo from the Giffen-DeMatteis era are both available, with Booster recently getting a technology upgrade in the pages of Superman. Either or both could aid the League's technology, Beetle with his innate genius and Booster with his future-based gadgetry. As for strife, Beetle joined Extreme Justice, while Booster has never made a secret of the fact that he's in heroics for the glitz. Either reason would surely rub other members the wrong way.

Morrison: "Again, they're too Giffen-DeMatteis era. They need a little more down time before they get revived in The League."

• Guy Gardner — Available? Yes. Desirable? Nope. Update technology? Maybe.

JLA

Cause strife? Surely.

Morrison: "God, no. I've never liked him."

• Orion — Availability is the big question mark with anyone from the New Gods. Sure, an actual "god" in this group of icons would be inspiring, but John Byrne reportedly has big plans for all the denizens of New Genesis and Apokolips. All that aside, Orion does match up two criteria: He has been in the League before (albeit briefly) and he could update the JLA's technology with gadgets and gizmos from New Genesis and Apokolips. As for causing strife? As the son of Darkseid, Orion causes tension just by walking in the room. Also, the League will just be coming out of a battle with Darkseid when the new member joins. Who wants their enemy's son on the team?

Morrison: "Visually, he's a great design, he's got those marvelous vehicles he drives around on, along with Mother Boxes and all the rest. He's a good possibility."

• Mr. Miracle — The former Leaguer could do much to upgrade the JLA's technology. Scott Free uses a host of advanced Fourth World technology in his career as master escape artist, including flying disks, a probe beam, and the multi-cube. His Mother Box could be invaluable to the League in the field, and the inter-dimensional gateways, the Boom Tubes, would give them a means of instant transportation anywhere in the universe. As for strife, Mr. Miracle's strong ties to his adoptive father Darkseid could cause discord within the ranks of the JLA, as some members may prefer to disassociate themselves from the New Gods altogether.

Morrison: "Again, I don't want to step on John Byrne's toes, but I like him a lot. He's the ultimate escape artist. You can't pin him down at all. Plus he's got all those wonderful inventions."

• Lightray — Aside from availability, Lightray would only match with two criteria: He's been in the League before (with Orion, as a matter of fact). Like anyone from the Fourth World, he'd be able to update League technology with Mother Boxes, Boom Tubes, and the like. However, as the cheeriest of the New Gods, it's hardly likely his presence on the team would cause anyone to get even mildly upset, let alone get the entire team feeling great strife. Although this could actually be the rub: Who wants a perpetually happy do-gooder always around, putting a positive spin on things?

Morrison: "I've got plans, but we'll see what plans John [Byrne] has, because I don't want to do too much to annoy him, obviously. Wait and see."

With all New Gods characters, it should be noted that Byrne has gone on record about JLA membership. "To the best of my knowledge, no Fourth World characters are up for JLA membership," he said.

So there are the candidates. Morrison, while not specifically pointing out who, said that there was an extremely good chance that one of the above is actually the mystery man who will fill the League's 12th seat. When will we see all of the Leaguers gathered in one place?

"Everyone will join after the current storyline, which is the Darkseid storyline," Morrison said. "Mark Millar's Zauriel mini-series will be done by then, so everyone will come together in issue #15, a story called 'Camelot.' That story also leads into the introduction of a new villain for the JLA who's the ultimate supervillain in many ways."

While guesses as to Leaguer #12 will continue until issue #15 ships, don't expect more hints any time soon. "If we gave it out, it wouldn't be a secret any more," JLA Editor Dan Raspler said. "Keep buying the series, and you'll all see soon enough. The revelation won't let anybody down. Trust us."

And Hourman makes #13

Just to add a further twist to the JLA membership, despite what he said about 12 members, Morrison let slip a new twist in his JLA plans: a 13th member. No guesswork this time, however. This new member will be a revamped and redesigned Hourman.

"We're doing a new Hourman, who's going to be the 13th member," Morrison said. "He won't sit on the table, because we're doing this Hourman as the master of time."

What does this new Hourman look like, and how does he fit in with previous incarnations of the character? Morrison remained tight-lipped but revealed that Rex Tyler, Tyler's son, and Miraclo pills probably won't be involved. "He actually has quite a strong connection with Metron that we'll discover later on," Morrison said. "He'll first appear in issue #11's 'flash-forward' sequence and will show up here and there in the future."

Morrison said that, while he wants the JLA to be "a good-sized force capable of defending a planet," 13 members is where things will stop. Any more, Morrison said, and things get unwieldy. Don't look for a 14th member any time soon.

Superman cover sets record at Sotheby's auction

Sotheby's June 14 comic book and comic art auction set a record-breaking bid for Golden Age cover art and brought in a total of $1.71 million. The top sale of the day was Detective Comics #27, featuring Batman's first appearance, which sold for $68,500. Fewer than 100 copies are known to survive, this copy was listed in Fine condition, and Sotheby's said it was the finest unrestored copy of that issue ever offered for public sale.

Fred Ray's original cover art for Superman #17 sold for $36,800, a record price for a Golden Age cover at auction. The art, which featured a WWII propaganda scene of Superman holding Hitler and Tojo, was the earliest known surviving example of a Superman cover to be offered for auction.

Other highlights from the 632 lots: An Action Comics #1 in VF- sold for $46,000, and a Superman Comics #1 in F- brought in $18,400. Both had minimal restoration and were from the collection of Jerry Buss, owner of the Los Angeles Lakers. A second unrestored Action Comics #1 in G+, which had remained in the possession of a single owner since it was purchased from the newsstand in 1938, sold for $37,950.A set of Science Fiction #1-5 in VF sold for $19,550.

This fanzine introduced Jerry Siegel's Superman concept and featured art by Joe Shuster and an unidentified artist. From the collection of Forrest J. Ackerman, it is the only known complete set to come to auction.

Original art for the cover of Batman #12, featuring Fred Ray and Jerry Robinson's final collaboration on a Batman cover, drew a high bid of $21,850. Original art by Carmine Infantino and Joe Giella for the cover of Batman #189 more than tripled its estimated value, when it sold for $17,250.

In comic strips, original Alex Raymond art for a Feb. 10, 1935, Sunday page drew a high bid of $27,600.

Overall, Sotheby's specialist Jerry Weist said Golden Age comics, particularly unrestored examples, did well, as did Silver Age cover art. Weist said he was seeing new collectors participate at all levels and judged the market to be increasing in strength.

Artists wanted for Acclaim Young Readers line

Acclaim Books is looking for pencilers and inkers to work on its new Young Readers line. Launching this month, the line features original stories about such licensed characters and concepts as Disney's Hercule, Aladdin, Pocahontas, Toy Story, Beauty and the Beast, and 101 Damatians, Saban Entertainment's Power Rangers, and The Fox Kids Network's animated Tick. The 64-page books are not in traditional comic-book format but in digest-sized, computer-colored editions. Every month, Acclaim will release new issues in the line's four core series — Disney's Action Club, Disney's Enchanting Stories, Fox Kids Funhouse, and Saban Powerhouse.

With the vast majority of the work falling within the Disney sub-brand, Evan Skolnick, senior editor of the line, suggests that all applicants have a command of the modern Disney animation style.

"Because of the proliferation of superhero-type titles in the comic-book field, many artists are never trained in the more basic — and often much more difficult — classic animation style," he said. "Most of the modern Disney properties combine the best attributes of classical animation characters and fully illustrated humans. Finding artists who can handle both these art styles on the same page is a challenge.

"The pencilling samples need to display a good command of matching a style guide and the ability to convincingly draw both humans and funny animals. The inking samples must show a lot of good whisper-smooth brush work — preferably over animation style artwork."

Interested pencillers and inkers should send a cover letter and photocopy samples of their work to: AYR Sample, Acclaim Comics, 275 Seventh Ave., 14th Fl., New York, NY 10001.

Court calendar

A financial disclosure hearing at which reorganization plans for Marvel Entertainment Group will be considered by U.S. Bankruptcy Court has been postponed from June 16 to July 17.

Marvel Attorney Harvey Miller told Judge Helen Balick that the remaining $8 million of Marvel's $100 debtor-in-possession financing, intended to see the company through its Chapter 11 reorganization, may not cover operating expenses through the end of June.

Marvel is negotiating with Chase Manhattan Bank for additional financing.

A hearing has been set for Sept. 16 to determine if the Toledo company Hollywood Dream Factory is owed any damages by Gary Colabuono and Richard S. Berger, executive officers of Classics International Entertainment Inc. and Moondog's.

Hollywood Dream Factory filed a suit for trademark infringement against Classics International in 1994, when Classics International began opening a chain of comics stores called Dream Factory. A federal judge ordered Classics International to cease using the Dream Factory name in 1995.

CARL BARKS STUDIO

Bill Crandey & Kathy Morby, Managers

(541) 476–7558 • FAX (541) 476–7064

One year ago the "ANIMAL QUACKERS" art book by Carl Barks was introduced. The entire edition sold out with a single advertisement in the CBG. This book featured a new universe of Barks' characters. This Gemstone book was designed by Russ Cochran. The original paintings for this book were principally sold in the early '70s. The fine tuned ("clean up") pencil drawings were carefully stored in anticipation of the book.

This art will be unveiled for the first time at the Carl Barks Studio booths during the San Diego convention. Each piece is available separately. Wholesale prices are available for five pieces. Please refer to the book "Animal Quackers" for your selection.

On Friday, July 18th at 10:30 a.m. 50 autographed Carl Barks' comic books will be sold for $10. Please form an organized line. At previous conventions security has been bewildered by the sudden swarming of duck people.

We are pleased to announce, that once again The Little Lulu Collectors meet at the Carl Barks Studio Booth. The time it is Saturday, July 19th at 3:00 p.m. This collectors' group is headed by Ed Buchner. All Tubby and Lulu fans are welcome. Please advise our booth of any Little Lulu or Tubby collectible sightings.

Memberships in "Uncle Scrooge Collectors International" are available. The official coat of arms - on an elaborate lapel pin (designed this year by Carl Barks), membership card and newsletter are available for $20. Rev. Ed Bergen, president, has announced the fifth annual national meeting. It will take place this September. This event will be announced in the newsletter.

To order the new 1997 fine art Disney book "Barks Treasury" phone (407) 560-4565.

See you in San Diego! - Bill Crandey

It's not fair.

Death is never fair and the comic-book industry lost a lot of talented people over the past year, but Kim Yale's death cuts me in a way the others haven't.

Whenever a talented person dies, the loss of what they might have done is always great. In Kim's case, I'm particularly bitter, because I wonder what stories she might have written if she had a fraction of the opportunities her male counterparts had. I once asked her in an interview what characters she would love to write. I don't remember them all, but her enthusiasm at perhaps being able to write one day for Enemy Ace or John Constantine was infectious.

Don't get me wrong. I'm not ranting about how chauvinistic the comic-book industry is. I like men. So did Kim, but that didn't mean she would smile meekly when condescended to or patronized. She spoke up for herself and others. That often earned her the "b" label, but it never stopped her from speaking her mind.

I'm just sorry she's gone. I was looking forward to more stories like "Oracle: Year One" in Batman Chronicles or "Youngblood" in Grimjack. I'll miss the blunt, funny comments she made at the panel discussions at last year's ICON convention. I'll miss talking to her about comic books, movies, and the state of the world in general. I didn't call her as much as I wanted, because I didn't want to bother her during her illness and because I always had a hard time getting past my awe of her talent. Yet if there was ever someone who was friendly, accessible and willing to talk to a fan as long as her voice held out, it was Kim Yale.

I'm particularly sorry that she won't be here to see results of her work. As a member of Friends of Lulu and just as a person, Kim inspired people and tried to reaffirm their belief that they could create, regardless of what conventional wisdom indicated. She was particularly passionate about helping other women, but by no means limited herself to that. I remember seeing her more than once talking to male fans, answering questions, challenging them, laughing with them about something they both enjoyed. Kim was outspoken. She was also a giver. She gave a great deal of herself to her fans in person and in her writing. My wish is that the comic-book industry would give something back and take to heart the message in her last column for CBG (#1212). She asked that we be bold enough to embrace the current problems as opportunities to change for the better, to expand the ideas of what comics can do on all levels.

Words don't express the loss I feel regarding Kim's death or the sorrow I feel for John. But I am grateful for the time and stories she gave us. I only selfishly wish there were more.

As I write this, it is the day after the conclusion of the Pittsburgh Comicon, a wonderful show that a small, hearty group of club members, including myself, had the great pleasure of attending as invited guests. A big thank you goes out from all of us. Now, after a lengthy drive back to central New York, I still find myself worn out from the trip. So before things grow hazy and clouded from further fatigue, now is the time for a few thoughts and observations while the memory is fresh:

Since this was the first large convention I've ever attended, I was truly impressed with how smoothly and professionally everything appeared to go. As a former organizer of a small convention, I am well aware of the many problems that must have gone on, and my praise goes out to the organizers for doing such a bang-up job of getting everything done and running smoothly. After stepping into the Expomart and seeing everything for the first time, something inside me knew things would click and produce a great show.

After spending three busy, enjoyable days at the show, I noticed something interesting: the lack of children attending the show. Yes, I know that there were some, but not in the numbers that I would've expected for a show of this size. Where were they? What does this little fact tell CBG readers about the current state of the industry? Comics are still a troubled industry and, while it may be making serious efforts to recover its former glory, what good will it do if there aren't any new readers for the product?

Correct me if I'm wrong, but weren't children, at one time, considered to be the major audience for comic books? What are the industry's plans to get comics back into the hands of a potentially huge market audience? While I do support DC's plan to launch a line of children's comics featuring popular characters like Scooby Doo there are a vast number of things yet to be done before the industry can ever hope to get back on its feet. Fellow CBG readers often mention these ideas in this letter column, but allow me to mention them one more time.

First, I don't care how companies do it, but in order to keep people reading comics we have to be able to afford them. Why would kids want to spend an average of $2 to $3 on one comic book every week when they can play all sorts of flashy computer and video games for next to nothing? Comics have to be cheaper. Go back to newsprint formats. The industry survived for half a century in this medium, so what's wrong with it? I can't stand the current rage for comics done on the glossy, magazine-like paper so popular the past few years. I never asked for it and I know many other people who dislike it, too. I hope collectors realize that this paper isn't going to decay within their lifetimes or their grandchildren's lifetimes. What sort of industry will there be in another 50 years when shops are flooded with these things? Let's bring back radical ideas like good storytelling and artwork and turn comics back into the entertaining art form that it once was.

A Comicon observation: as an aficionado of Golden Age comics for many years, I greatly enjoyed meeting some of my favorite creators who are, I'm thankful to say, still with us. I had an enjoyable chat with Julius Schwartz and Sheldon Moldoff. I got to meet Irwin Hasen and had the pleasure of meeting Mart and Carrie Nodell for the second time. During my many strolls around the show floor, I noticed something that I had expected to see and, unfortunately, did: the sight of all the "hot" creators attracting hordes of fans, while the Golden Age creators drew only an occasional fan. These gentlemen, along with their departed predecessors and colleagues, are partly responsible for making comics what they are today and they deserve to be recognized for it. In today's fickle industry, today's creators can be gone tomorrow — think about that.

I won't dwell further on the negative aspects of attending a convention, such as the fact that speculators are still out there or the fact that the food prices were exorbitant. I just want to mention the overall feeling of enthusiasm I felt during the show as I traveled around. There were some places that didn't have it as much, but it was still there. I had a great time at the auction, leaving with several things I liked and the satisfaction of helping a worthy cause. I enjoyed chatting with dealers and small-press representatives. Folks, there's an amazing amount of talent to be found on a convention floor; why not take a chance on some of their comics? They may surprise you. I enjoyed meeting the Friends of Lulu and assisting at the Comic Book Legal Defense Fund table. Both are vital and important organizations well deserving of your support.

Thanks again to all the organizers of the Pittsburgh Comicon.

[I just got back from the Charlotte Heroes Convention (my first in that city) and was delighted at the large number of children in attendance. It was really a family event, and we were told that one son's attendance at the convention had been the only Father's Day gift his father had requested. The percentage of women, too, was higher than I was used to seeing at shows. (And one woman even said her significant other — I can't recall the exact relationship — had dropped her at the show, because he wasn't interested in comics, but she loved them.

The one demographic that seemed less represented than it had been in the past was teen-age boys, say, 14 to 19 years old. Not to say that there were none — but there were fewer than I'd expected to see. All in all, though, the mix of attendees was terrific — and eager.]

I always enjoyed Mark Evanier's show-biz essays in the pages of Crossfire and Hollywood Superstars and I enjoy reading his column in CBG. I suppose I should write in and let him know that some time. But this letter is about Brent Frankenhoff's sidebar to Evanier's recent Laurel and Hardy tribute.

Do you remember a song called "The Curly Shuffle" by a band I think was called Jump and the Saddle? (I'm not certain of the band name; I'd look it up if I had a Rhino Records catalog handy; I'm sure it's on one of Dr. Demento's compilations.) At the time that song first came out, a cable TV channel (either WGN Chicago or KBD Detroit) used it as a theme song for a nightly midnight hour of Three Stooges.

Unfortunately, this phased out the nightly midnight showing of Laurel and Hardy shorts that had been showing previously and, admittedly, repeatedly, until faithful viewers had seen each one three or four times.

I remember seeing the short Frankenhoff described. I also remember seeing the title "Tit for Tat." However, although my memory can be faulty or uncertain at times (see above), I believe he may have matched the wrong story to the title.

The way I recall it, Laurel and Hardy are on a picnic or vacation, towing a trailer behind a car. They meet a couple (who may be the same couple from the episode Frankenhoff described) and in the husband's temporary absence, they inadvertently get the wife (and possibly themselves) ripsnorting intoxicated. The returning husband objects to this (and to wifey's inebriated overfamiliarity with the boys) and there follows the usual hilarious series of ever-inflating indignities: paintbrush in the face, something dumped over the head, something else poured down trousers, and so on, with the victim politely waiting for and enduring each assault, only to top it. It truly is one of the funniest sequences ever put on celluloid.

I saw that several times, I laughed myself silly, and in my memory I connect it with the title "Tit for Tat." I may, of course, be wrong. I do agree with Frankenhoff that the short of that title is one of their funniest efforts. I wonder if it's possible if the sequences Frankenhoff and I described were both from the same short — possibly halves of a two-reeler?

In a perfect world, everything Laurel and Hardy ever did would be available on home video; I'd think that was why videotape was invented.

Incidentally, if you ever get the chance to compare and contrast the two bodies of work, it's surprising how many Laurel and Hardy jokes, situations, and sight gags wound up being reused by The Three Stooges (and occasionally by the Marx brothers, as well).

["The Curly Shuffle" was the one hit that the otherwise non-novelty group Jump 'n the Saddle Band produced; it was released in 1983. (Thanks to records guru Tim Neely for the details.)

You may recall the short you discuss as "Tit for Tat" in conjunction with that title because the TV station showed them together. I don't know that it did, but many film buffs have tied the two together, because the two consist of the only time Laurel and Hardy planned a specific sequel.

The film you're discussing is "Them Thar Hills" (1934), with Charlie Hall as the aggressive husband. In 1935, Laurel and Hardy open a new appliance store and make a friendly introductory call on the neighboring store — but it happens to be a delicatessen owned by the couple from the camping trip. While the wife wants to be friends, Hall picks up the conflict immediately.

Historian William K. Everson says, "Since the film is a sequel to 'Them Thar Hills,' it can be argued, I suppose, that the earlier film was the 'build-up' and this one the climax. Certainly the films fit logically and smoothly together to form forty minutes of explosive slapstick, although in point of fact the films were never shown that way theatrically, and it has only been in recent years that they have been shown in tandem by imaginative film societies."]

Imagine a baseball game between Flash and Superman (the "real" one, with super-speed). Flash throws a rocket of a fastball (twice as hard as Nolan Ryan in his prime). By the time the pitch crosses the plate, Flash is waiting as the catcher, fully adorned with catcher's mask, mitt, etc. Flash is able to cover every base and position so it looks as though there are nine Flashes in the field. We have a Flash as manager and even a Flash in the center field bleachers as a fan. Also, a Flash is selling hot dogs in the lower deck and a Flash is throwing practice pitches in the bullpen. Superman is batting. He is able torun all the bases, appearing as three guys on base at once. A Superman appears as first-base coach, as well as third-base coach. Since the ball is going so fast that few can see it, we also trust Superman to be an honest home-plate umpire. Similarly, Flash is honest, whether the man is safe or out.

Question: If these guys are as fast as I'm describing, how do their enemies even see them to shoot weapons at them? On the George Reeves Superman TV show, the crooks constantly shot at Superman and even had time to throw their guns at him sometimes.

Well, they're doing it to us again. I can't believe Nicholas Cage is going to be the new Man of Steel — Jimmy Olsen, maybe, but never Superman. From everything I'd heard or read, Kevin Smith's script was a comics fan's dream. Doomsday, the Justice League, and the death and rebirth of Superman, all on the big screen. Wow. But now here comes Tim Burton, who admitted in an interview I'd read somewhere that he had never been able to read comic books — couldn't quite follow the panels or something — to do for Superman what he did for Batman. And he's doing it, too.

I guess in a world where Michael Keaton is Batman (I never did like this choice. A lifetime spent training mind and body and all you get is a good stare and a receding hairline? Please.), then, sure, Nicholas Cage could be Superman, but not in my world.

I am not saying that Cage is not a good actor. Actually, I think he's quite good, and anyone who knows the story behind his name knows that he is a comics fan, as well. He is just not Superman. The studio could be worrying about the old argument of how non-fans won't come to a comic-book movie. They must have a star to draw in the people who don't read the comics.

How do they know that people won't watch a pure comic-book movie? They've never given us one to see. Always, changes must be made to make the material more "accessible." I am so tired of hearing this sad excuse made so that studio executives and directors can play god with characters they didn't and couldn't create and stories they didn't and couldn't write. And, to add insult to injury, they are also considering using the new costume.

That's what I call making the movie accessible. Everyone knows who Superman is and, for that matter, what he looks like. Go ahead, close your eyes and think of Superman. Depending on who you are and how old you are, you might have seen images drawn by Curt Swan, Neal Adams, John Byrne, or Dan Jurgens. Maybe you saw George Reeves or Christopher Reeve. Only you know. But I'll bet anything that you didn't see Nicholas Cage standing there in the new uniform. Please don't let this happen.

Mark Evanier's articles regarding Los Angeles' Silent Movie theater and the death of its proprietor, Laurence Austin, were especially poignant to me. There aren't many revivals of silent film here in Idaho, and, owing to constraints on time and money, I'm not able to attend very many film festivals. But I do visit Los Angeles at least once each year and, in times past, I could always count on a visit to Silent Movie for several silent shorts and a silent feature, with live musical accompaniment, all for the very reasonable price of $8.

In many ways, Laurence Austin was the film-world equivalent of Gladstone, Kitchen Sink, and others who have offered classic comics reprints at bargain prices; they are among popular culture's finest benefactors. While I regret learning that Austin may not have been quite the kindly gentleman he pretended to be, that revelation doesn't diminish all the good that many of us derived from his theater. I thanked him every time I saw him, and I'm sorry I won't get the chance to thank him again.

I also enjoyed Mark's two-part article about Laurel and Hardy. I'm sorry to say that my first exposure to the authentic Stan and Ollie was via Way back in the beginning Star Trek was struggling to get onto the airwaves. T.V. networks and stations could not understand the concept in words. Produced from about 1973-1987 or so, each set had only one very small printing (as Magill Barrett Roddenberry) states. The pictures were taken on the set by Gene himself, showing various phases of each production, including himself, costumes, creatures (some that made it and some that did not). Each set is 16 cards long and there are 19 sets total. Order yours today as we have a very limited supply and they can never be remade as the negatives do not exist anymore!

The Big Noise. These days I consider that to be their worst film but, back then, I didn't know any better. I had to see more, which wasn't easy, there being few cable channels and no video stores. After saving lots of allowance money, I bought a projector and then waited for Blackhawk Films, the Laurel and Hardy source in those days, to offer bargains, which it did with wonderful frequency. In short, I became a film enthusiast, which led to my becoming an animation enthusiast. Animation, in turn, revived my interest in comic books, Disney and humor titles in particular. Last summer, on my way to Comic-Con International in San Diego, I brought everything full circle. Fellow comedy and comics fan Dana Gabbard showed me the way to the famous staircase on Vendome Street in Los Angeles where Laurel and Hardy filmed "The Music Box." Visiting the site was almost like a homecoming.

Dana Gabbard, by the way, resembles a clean-shaven Oliver Hardy.

So Nickelodeon's canceled Space Cases. Oh, joy. Maybe they'll replace it with another show about a spunky teen-age girl who dresses like a roadie for Shonen Knife and has multi-ethnic suburbian friends.

Great Space Cases moments:

- Radu, ill and delusional, convinced aliens are invading the ship, shouting, "I've got to do something!" — turning, charging headlong into a closed door, and knocking himself unconscious. And Bova's response: "Interesting choice."
- Bova assembling a sandwich, sniffing cheese slices to make sure they're safe.
- Ms. Davenport, bald-headed and tied to a chair following a brief transformation into an evil entity, rolling from one side of the screen to the other, screaming at the top of her lungs, as the ship makes a sharp turn.
- Radu's marked and presumably wholly unintentional resemblance to Barbra Striesand.
- That thing on Rosie's control panel that looks like a Speak-n-Say.
- Elmira's purple lip gloss, intense mascara, and hoop earrings.
- Bova's fuzzy bunny slippers.
- The way Catalina's eyes roll back in her head when she emits a quasi-sonic scream.
- Thelma responding to commands to "do something" by singing and dancing — badly.
- Commander Goddard intoning, "I think we've got an evil twin situation here," as if it were something he'd studied in flight school.
- Radu lifting Thelma out of a quicksand pit by her nose.
- Thelma "swimming" in space.
- Radu running with a huge electrical cable, reaching its full length, and being yanked backwards.
- Robin Leach as interspellar huckster Utz calling Bova "Bover."
- Radu, ill and delusional, walking up to a thoroughly bewildered Bova, waving his arms, going "Arrrarrararragarah!" and stalking off.
- Ms. Davenport leading the students in an aerobics class.
- Robot guards chasing Catalina around the space prison where she's been mistakenly incarcerated, intoning, "There is no escape. Your tracking collar has been set to explode in 20 seconds. Thank you for coming to our planet. Have a nice day."
- Bova, transformed into a hyper-unctuous Mercurian, running up to the others: "You guys look great! Really! I mean that!"
- Rosie's video project for class: "From the boiling seas of Mercury comes — Rosie 'Anni'!"
- Suzee's hair-streaks.
- Catalina looking for her imaginary friend and asking for others if they've seen her.
- Evil twins of Harlan and Radu fighting each other, coming face to face, and growling at each other.
- "Don't look over there."
- "No! Not the jump tubes!"

The letter from Tom Bowdon in CBG #1227 is the reason for this short list concerning any Green Hornet series from Now Comics. I do have the following issues in my possession, so they do exist.

The Green Hornet Vol. 1 #1-14
The Green Hornet Vol. 2 #1-40 (begins in 1991)
The Green Hornet Annual #1 (1992)
The Green Hornet 1994 Annual
The Green Hornet: Dark Tomorrow #1-3
The Green Hornet: Solitary Sentinel #1-3
Kato of The Green Hornet #1-4
Kato of The Green Hornet 2 #1-2
Sting of The Green Hornet #1-4
Tales of The Green Hornet #1-2
Tales of The Green Hornet Vol. 2 #1-4
Tales of The Green Hornet Vol. 3 #1-3

While I am not currently able to include the cover prices or dates for these issues, I hope to do so soon, for the CBG Price Guide, if need be.

I could also wish for Dark Horse to begin publishing this title, as well as maybe the Lost in Space title that was published by Innovation before it lost its financial backing. But that would be a wasted wish, since Dark Horse has already given up on Doc Savage, even though two letters printed in different recent issues of the Tarzan title asked for Doc's return. I'd kind of like to see that, too.

I just wanted to compliment you on the cover of issue #1227. Seeing a child surrounded by and engrossed in all those marvelous toys, comics, and pop-culture knickknacks really gave me a nostalgic jolt. It brought me back to the days before comics became commerce, when creativity was still valued above all else. I sometimes forget that, at one time, nobody I knew worried about what something would be worth and how trendy it was. Instead, we read and collected the things that most piqued our imaginations. Looking at that CBG cover brought back for me some of that fun, wonder, and joy. Thanks again for reminding me of why I got involved in comics in the first place.

The origins of 'Men in Black'

Men in Black creator Lowell Cunningham signed MIB trading cards from Inkworks at Heroes Con.*

Malibu published two Men in Black mini-series under its Aircel imprint in 1990 and 1991, respectively.

By Matt Brady

Before there was the movie event of the summer, before Will Smith and Tommy Lee Jones were cast as partners for the ultra-secret governmental agency, before one dollar of a budget was allocated, even before any licensing tie-in was announced, there was Men in Black, the comic book, created by Lowell Cunningham and published by Malibu.

Catching up with Cunningham at a convention, one would be amazed at just how un-Hollywood he appears. A native and resident of Tennessee, Cunningham sits quietly and unassumingly behind whoever's table he's working at (the non-sports card manufacturer Inkworks most recently) and introduces himself to people as the man who created the original comic book that the movie is based on. Needless to say, skeptical looks abound.

"Only about one person in 20 knows that Men in Black was ever a comic book," Cunningham said. "But people are starting to catch on that it was. There's a lot more interest about the comic book again, which I certainly don't mind."

Men in Black traces its roots back to Cunningham's late '80s college days, when he and a friend were driving near Knoxville, Tenn.

"We were in a small car, and that made this black car that passed us just look huge," Cunningham said. "My friend said, 'That'd be the perfect car for the men in black to drive.' I didn't know what he was talking about, so I asked him to tell me more, and he explained to me how these mysterious men in black had been wrapped up in UFOlogy for decades. Supposedly, if you see a UFO and report it, these mysterious men in black show up at your door to ask questions and try to cover it up. I thought that this was just a great concept and couldn't believe that no one had every used it in a television series or movie."

Cunningham decided that, rather than reading up on the men in black in the standard paranoia and conspiracy texts, he would start from scratch and create his own unique backstory for just who these mystery men were (Earth's last line of defense and protectors against the scum of the galaxy) and who they worked for (the MIB, more secret than the FBI, CIA, and NSA combined).

Once the story was written, Cunningham faced a problem. Living in Tennessee, he knew he wouldn't be able to attract the attention of Hollywood studios and get his idea made into a television series or movie, so he turned to comics, instead. "I had been shopping the idea around comics companies for about two years before a friend suggested I should try sending it to Malibu," Cunningham said. "I mailed it to Malibu on a Friday, and, by the following Friday, we had an agreement in the works. It was the first in a series of big breaks with Men in Black."

Six issues of Men in Black were published by Malibu's Aircel imprint as two three-issue mini-series in 1990 and 1991. When the issues went out of print, Cunningham thought that was the end of the property. However, during the wild, crazy days of comics' boom years (1992, to be specific), Malibu decided to show its properties to movie studios with the idea of generating a string of movies.

"I originally wanted to see Men in Black as a television series," Cunningham said. "I thought a weekly series would fit the material really well. And what do you know? Chris Carter came along with The X-Files (after Men in Black was created, I have to point out), and proved me right."

Shortly after Malibu advertised Men in Black, Columbia and Steven Spielberg's Amblin Entertainment snapped it up and put it on the development track. From the outset, Cunningham was involved in the movie's development.

"The people at Columbia were great," Cunningham said. "We had a long discussion about the appearance of the movie and details from the comic book that should be included. They managed to incorporate a lot of the comic book into the movie, including the Ray-Ban joke — and the neuralizer, which they've made work with a great visual effect."

Once the movie deal was signed, Cunningham quietly slipped out of comics, and got a job with the magazine Xpose, a job which he still holds.

As the movie plodded its way through development and Tommy Lee Jones and Will Smith were set as its stars, Cunningham admitted he initially had a mixed reaction about the casting. "Tommy Lee Jones was a perfect choice," Cunningham said. "In fact, I've told plenty of people that, when he was cast, I realized I should've been thinking of him all along when I was writing the comic book."

Will Smith was a different story. Since Men in Black was cast and filming before Independence Day was released, Cunningham said he had been unsure about Smith's being cast as the junior MIB agent. "I knew Will Smith was a rap singer and that was about it," Cunningham added. "In fact he was the only rap singer who ever sang a song I liked, called 'Summertime.' I went and saw him in Bad Boys and felt a little better about his casting in Men in Black. Needless to say, after seeing Independence Day, I was extremely happy with the decision to go with him."

Cunningham maintained a low profile during the movie's development and filming, keeping his job at Xpose and doing a little comics work with independent publisher Castle.

As the movie release drew closer, however, Cunningham found himself doing more and more Hollywood-type things, like going to press junkets and advance screenings. "I met Tommy Lee Jones and Will Smith out in Hollywood at the big advance screening and press meeting," Cunningham said. "I told Tommy that I thought he did a really good job, and he looked at me, was quiet for a minute, and said, 'Yeah, I guess I really did look like the guy in the comic book up there, didn't I?' And Will Smith was just as nice in person as his characters are on screen."

Also, Cunningham got a chance to meet the patron saint of action-adventure himself. "I was surrounded by reporters after the screening, and at one point, they all just seemed to part, and Steven Spielberg came in," Cunningham said, still in awe. "He came up to me, shook my hand, and said, 'Without your work, we would have none of this.' It was incredible. I didn't wash my hand for a week."

As the release date of Men in Black approaches, Cunningham explained that more and more manufacturers, such as Inkworks, Hamilton Watches, Ray-Ban sunglasses, Sprint, and Galoob, are jumping on the Men in Black bandwagon to produce tie-in merchandise. "Men in Black has garnered more varied merchandising support than anything we've seen before," said Inkworks CEO Alan Caplan. "Our card set hits just before the movie opens, the Ray-Ban sunglasses are already out, and the official Men in Black watches are making their way across the country. It's just incredible."

Throughout all this, Cunningham still comes off slightly low-key — or at least more low-key than anyone else who's just about to have a huge merchandising movie open that they're creatively responsible for. "People do tell me that," Cunningham said. "I tell them it's not that I'm not excited about this; I've just had five years to prepare. I'm really thrilled about it. Really."

And, believe it or not, Cunningham doesn't consider himself a Hollywood mogul-type now and isn't even thinking of leaving Tennessee for California.

Besides, Cunningham has plenty to keep him busy these days, like the upcoming Men in Black movie tie-in three-issue mini-series from Marvel and perhaps a new ongoing Men in Black series. "I'd really like to get back into comic books again," Cunningham said. "It's a lot more satisfying on many different levels. I hope the movie's success will give me a chance to do that. Besides, the comic book is all my responsibility. With the movie, there are so many people involved in its success, and, traditionally, it ends up being called the director's movie: in our case, Barry Sonnenfeld. The comic book however, is all mine, and I like that feeling."

Additionally, Cunningham is working in conjunction with the upcoming Men in Black animated series premiering this October on the WB network. "I'd really like to get the comic book and the animated series to tie in a little," Cunningham said. "Not something like a storyline continuing between the comics series to the animated series, but maybe have something mentioned in the comic book that was featured in the animated series and vice versa."

Cunningham is also working on ideas to pitch for something that he and Columbia hope will soon be on the horizon, a little thing called Men in Black 2.

When Franz Peter Schubert passed away in 1828, he left behind an amazing legacy of music — hundreds of compositions which are performed to this day. Now and forever, his symphonies and orchestral works are performed, including the well-known "Trout Quintet" for violin, viola, cello, double bass, and piano and the "String Quintet in C Major," but his best-known work is undoubtedly his immortal "Unfinished Symphony."

"I had the honor of being an utterly useless assistant to Jack Kirby at the time, so I got to be on the premises as he brought forth this masterpiece."
— Mark Evanier

I'll explain in a minute what this has to do with this week's topic.

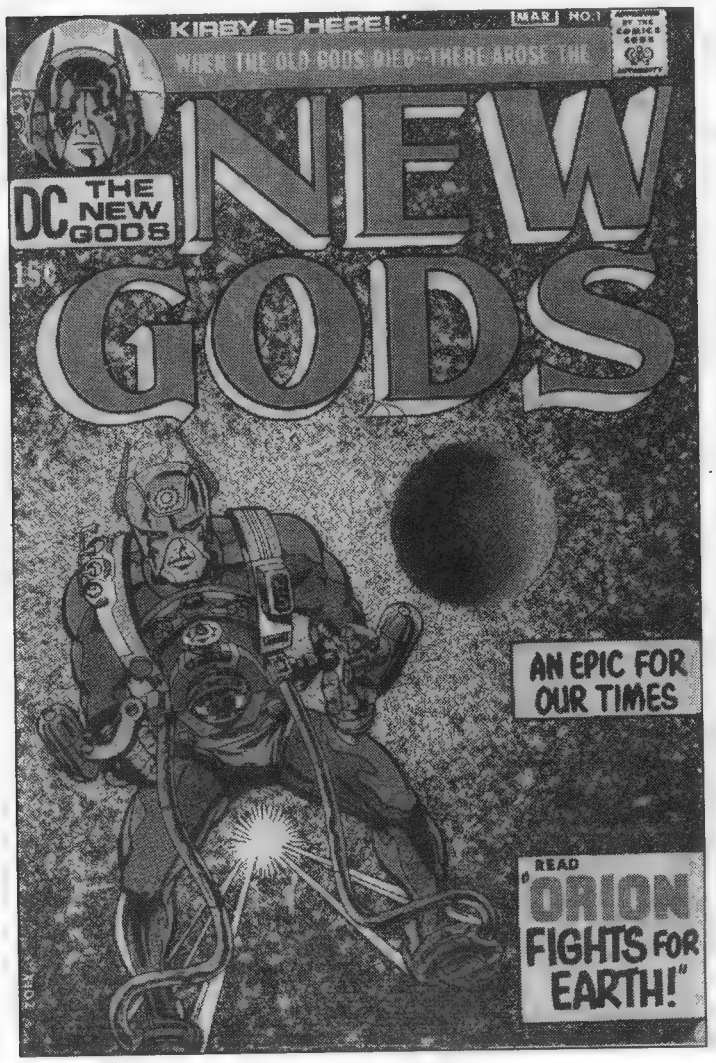
I almost never plug stuff in this column that could mean a nickel to me, and this week is no exception. DC is about to release a collected trade paperback of Jack Kirby's New Gods comics from the early '70s. I did the foreword for the collection, but I've been paid in full for it, and stand to gain nada if you buy it.

Nevertheless, what follows is my highest recommendation and noodging. I think New Gods and its allied titles are a work of genius from one of the few folks in comics to whom that overused mantle clearly applies.



Before I explain, I want to discuss my objectivity on this topic. I have very little, I'm afraid. I love the comic book and I even more loved the guy who did it. I had the honor of being an utterly useless assistant to Jack Kirby at the time, so I got to be on the premises as he brought forth this masterpiece.

My contribution was darn close to non-existent, for New Gods was a unique and deeply personal work — one that I have read maybe a hundred times since I first read it, right off Jack's pencilled pages. (And with no disrespect to any of our industry's fine artists, there has never been, nor will there ever be, anyone who could have inked that work and captured 100% of what was in those pencils. Not humanly possible. Mike Royer, who embellished the latter half of the run, came as close as anyone could.)

What most impresses me about it is that, with every reading, I find something that wasn't there before. This was the special talent of Kirby on almost every comic book; his work was so rich, so filled-to-overflowing with ideas, that writers still fight to take over the characters he began. There simply is so much there to work from, so many concepts on which one can expand.

If anything, New Gods was too rich in ideas. Jack thought he would do perhaps 40, maybe 50, issues of it and as many of its two allied titles, Forever People and Mister Miracle, culminating in a grand finale of the entire trilogy. Then, he hoped, his 3000-page epic would be condensed and reissued as a series of mass-market books, preferably in hardcover. (On college campuses, J.R.R. Tolkein's famed trilogy was then enjoying a renewed popularity, selling faster than the answers to an Anthropology final; Kirby thought the comic business was nuts not to be going after that audience.)

Since he never got to complete his epic, New Gods and the other two are crammed with ideas and characters he intended to develop, explore, and later explain. Even hanging around him, as I got to do in those days, I didn't understand everything he included in those early issues — and still don't.

But I'll bet I would have, by the time he'd finished.

The format he devised was not mere vanity at work. Comic books then were under an atrophying system of newsstand distribution. This was before the days of direct sales and the comic-book shop as we now know it. The market was dying, and there were ominous predictions that in five to 10 years the comic-book industry would be about as viable as the manufacture of flea collars for mastodons. Kirby felt that comics, to survive, would have to move into upscale formats and legit bookstores.

Today, many of comics' best work appears in similar, albeit shorter, packages. But back then, Jack was, as usual, ahead of the industry. He envisioned, long before anyone else, the mini-series and the idea of collecting an entire one in book format.

To pioneer this form, he devised the series that, for reasons that remain in dispute, came to be called The Fourth World. The characters and a rough idea of their milieu had come to him in his latter days at Marvel. You can see the embryonic stages in the last Tales of Asgard stories he did in the hindquarter of The Mighty Thor for a time. At the time, he was, as is well known, unhappy with his lot at Marvel. He had co-created some of the most popular and profitable characters in comic-book history only to quickly lose both copyright and creative custody of them.

Back then, it was an inviolate rule of comic-book publishers not to allow creators to retain even a fraction of either. Since Jack was unable to change this, he decided, instead, not to give this newest idea to Marvel. He drew up some prototype sketches, made some notes, and put it all in a drawer. A few years later, when he had the chance to go to DC, out it came.

He briefly talked of only plotting and editing the whole series, with writing and art to be done by others under his supervision. Then, when DC insisted he handle it all, he turned it into his most personal work ever.

This was in 1970. Jack Kirby had worked in comics for 30-some years — about as long as there'd been comic books — but usually in collaboration with others. He had written or co-written many of the comics he'd drawn but had rarely had the opportunity to find his own voice without a scripter or strong-willed editor hovering nearby.

Most of those comics were quite wonderful, but some were wonderful in spite of Jack and his collaborator pulling in different directions. This was especially true his last few years at Marvel, when Jack would pencil and largely plot an issue of Fantastic Four or Thor and then Stan Lee would compose the dialogue to fit the pictures. Stan was and is a very clever wordsmith, but when you put two writers in a room, you wind up with two different points of view, often more.

Sometimes, two differing viewpoints can coalesce and enhance one another. Sometimes, they neutralize each other and you wind up with a compromise that embodies neither standpoint. You and I look at those last few years of Lee-Kirby creation and see some fine, fine comics. But Jack looked at them and saw comics wherein he was telling one story and the text was relating another. For that, and many reasons having to do with the way he felt Marvel was treating him, he felt things had to change.

This can be hard for those of us in the audience to accept — that most creative people feel the need to progress, to not do the same thing forever. We, however, find something we love and want it to go on forever, delivered to us in endless supply. We forget that creators grow or even burn out on one subject and that they need to follow their muses, often into uncharted territory.

It isn't just comics fans who feel this way. I recently read an unpublished manuscript about The Beatles. In it, John Lennon is quoted complaining about those who didn't grasp that he could no longer run in place, cranking out Beatles music with Paul McCartney. They'd done wonderful things together but he'd been there, done that, and felt compelled to move on. It wasn't so much that he wanted to leave Paul but that he could no longer stay. He didn't see why his followers couldn't grasp that.

In 1971, when New Gods was first published, it was greeted with mixed reactions. Some loved it, some seemed puzzled. I think many of the latter were expecting another Fantastic Four or Thor. A lot of fans felt Kirby belonged, if not on those specific series, then certainly back at Marvel. Others expected or wanted something that read like the Marvels he'd done with Stan Lee.

That, Kirby never attempted. Just as Lennon wasn't out to make Beatles music without Paul, Jack wasn't trying to do Marvel comics without Stan. He was after something new, something different, something more thoroughly Kirby. Even though I worked with Jack at the time and thought I knew him better than any reader, I don't think I appreciated how autobiographical and personal a story he was constructing.

It's in the drawings, it's in the plot, but it's even more in the dialogue, which he wrote in a quirky, almost operatic style. Some complained that it didn't sound like natural speech, missing the point that Jack was no more interested in realistic conversation than he was in realistic anatomy. (I was one of those who found the speech awkward and even said so in a few interviews. Today, as I re-read those issues, I think I was out of my everlovin' mind. The dialogue is, for me, the best part.)

The New Gods was intended as a mythology for our times. It is the story of two worlds — New Genesis and Apokolips — that represented the eternal conflict that we all must confront 'twixt good and evil. Representing evil — in this corner — was the aptly-named Darkseid. (Darkseid, by the way, was pronounced "Dark-side," as in "the dark side of man's nature." It was not pronounced "Darkseed," as some readers assumed and a few still insist. They are wrong. It's not a bad name either, but they're wrong.)

And in the opposite corner, we had Orion — a champion of New Genesis, but one cursed with his own duality. Orion was a man of two faces, one representing the ideal he wished to achieve; the other befitting his heritage as the son of Darkseid, exposing what he often had to become to survive against the realities of a combative world. Many scholars have noted the Kirby self-caricatures in almost any character who sported a cigar (The Thing, Nick Fury), but Jack was actually digging into himself in most of his works.

Orion is Kirby, not literally but emotionally, and among the many inhabitants of the Fourth World, one finds dozens more Jack Kirbys, each an analogy for some facet of his life and career. Still other characters represent other people and issues in Jack's life and worldview, some so camouflaged and removed from reality that they can never be matched up.

A tip: Don't waste your time trying. It took me 20-some years to figure out who Lightray was based upon, and, even then, I'm not sure I'm right.

What I am sure about, though, is that New Gods represents 11 issues of honest expression by comics' greatest creative talent. There are moments in there I love, scenes I don't, sequences I don't pretend to understand — but all of it was created with a gut passion. There were very few things Jack couldn't do on a comic-book page. One of them was to depict a scene or emotion he did not believe told a truth about our world.

Since we're talking about honesty here, I have to make two admissions, one being that, when you buy this New Gods collection, you will not get a complete story, now or ever. As fine as it was, New Gods was halted just as it was getting started. DC's then-publisher proclaimed it a sales failure. His successors say they feel otherwise and have continually revised and reprinted it, as they are doing here.

Although they later asked Jack to finish it, and he complied with something of an ending, to me the Fourth World comics comprise comics' great unfinished symphony. Now do you see how the opening paragraph relates?

Kirby's story was never fully realized and never can be. Others have continued and will continue to do their takes on the material, their explorations of his themes — I did an especially unimpressive one I wish I could do over — but we're all just playing with someone else's character names and designs. Some attempts have been delightfully entertaining — wonderful, even — but they no more complete what Kirby did than a new Winnie the Pooh book is a part of the work of A.A. Milne.

Still, the chapters that Kirby did of New Gods are wonderful and well worth your patronage. In there is "The Pact," which was his all-time favorite among the eight-zillion comics stories he did. I prefer "The Death Wish of Terrible Turpin" and "The Glory Boat," both of which are in this volume. (You also get a number of short tales Jack did of "The Young Gods of Supertown" and a cover gallery.)

I must also admit that I was fibbing when I said I had nothing to gain from your purchase of this new collection. We all stand to gain.

Lately, a lot of things don't sell in comic-book shops, and one of them is reprints of older comics. There are, however, many wonderful comics of the past that cry out to be put back in print.

Some of the recent attempts have, perhaps, been priced too high. They haven't sold, so there haven't been more. But DC has priced this New Gods reprint volume low enough that it oughta be within everyone's budget. This has necessitated doing it in black-and-white, which I regret, but, if that leads to a whole series of these, it's a great trade-off.

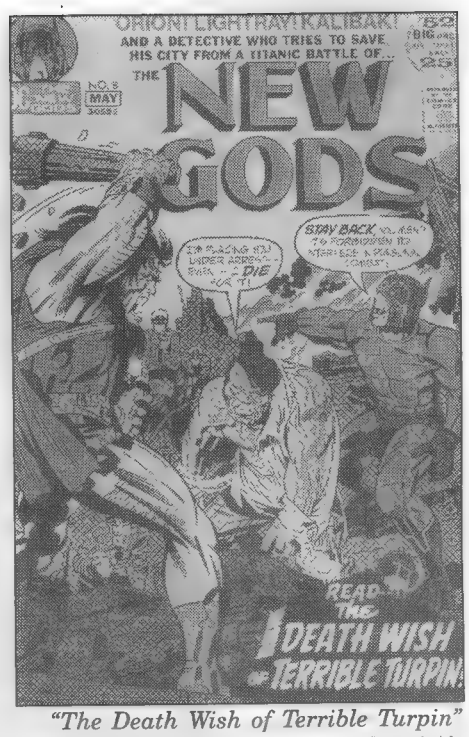
I'd like to see them bring out collections of Forever People and Mister Miracle, and then some of Jack's other DC work, like Superman's Pal Jimmy Olsen, Kamandi, and — going back further — Challengers of the Unknown and everything Simon and Kirby did.

And we could all list piles of non-Kirby comics that ought to be reissued. (Send your suggestions — and your thanks for this book — to DC's diligent and wise editor of such things, Bob Kahan.)

So talk this one up, buy it, and get your friends to buy it. Maybe that'll get the other Fourth World stories in print. Maybe I'll even get another gig writing forewords. At the very least, you'll get to see Jack Kirby at the peak of his creative powers. You can't do better than that.

And on the way home, pick up a CD of Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony" and try listening to it as you read New Gods. I haven't tried this myself, but I'm betting it fits.

This has been another column by Mark Evanier, whose address is 363 S. Fairfax Ave., #303, Los Angeles, CA 90036. E-Mail can be sent to him at evanier@ix.netcom.com. And may The Source be with you.



"The Death Wish of Terrible Turpin" from New Gods #8 is one of Evanier's favorite stories.

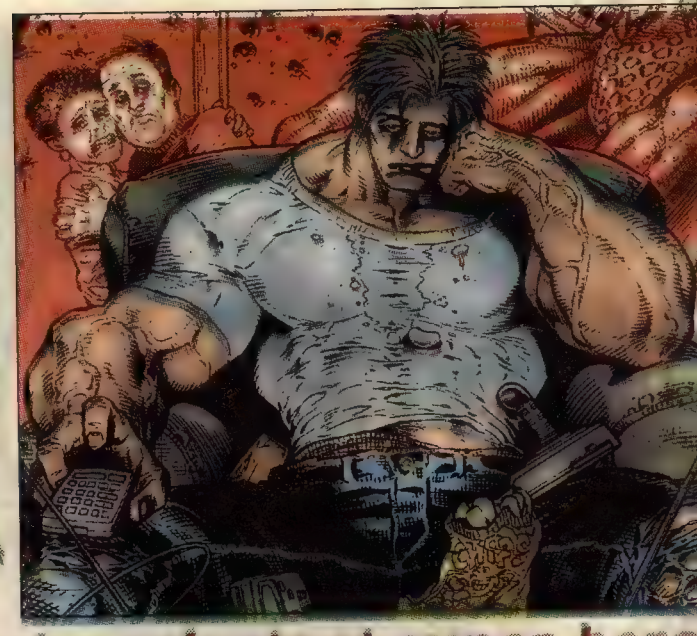
MAJOR BUMMER



A reluctant proposal became a series about a reluctant super-hero

"I ... submitted it with absolutely no expectation of anyone ever thinking twice about it."
— John Arcudi

"The strength of [Major Bummer] is that it isn't just a bunch of one-liners but is character-driven."
— Peter Tomasi

By Jeff Lang
For DC Comics

Louis Martin doesn't want to be a super-hero.

It severely cuts into his sleep schedule and significantly reduces the amount of time he gets to spend with his home videogame system.

In fact, if you had asked Louis, on the Friday morning he turned into a super-hero, "What's something you really wouldn't want to be?" — he probably would have looked at you with a blank stare. It is a pretty stupid question.

But, there he is — a super-hero: a big, muscle-bound, bullet-proof, hyper-intelligent super-hero. If he lived in New York or Metropolis or Coast City, he'd probably fit right in, but Martin has planted his shallow roots in the suburbs of Anytown, U.S.A., where big, muscle-bound, bullet-proof guys still can cause a stir.

And there are these other people who also suddenly developed superpowers. And they like it and they want Louis to be their leader, and he just wants them to go away. And then there's the super-villains who, for some reason, want to hurt him. And the aliens with the science experiment and the really large cat ...

And that's pretty much what Louis Martin's life is like these days.

Major Bummer was created by John Arcudi and Doug Mahnke, the guys responsible for Lobo/Mask. Tom Nguyen joins the duo on the series which came about, according to writer Arcudi, because, "Pete Tomasi really liked my work. We did Lobo/Mask together and had a ball, so he said, 'Hey, I'm an associate editor now. I'm looking for properties I can edit myself.' I gave him a list of DC characters — all the lame ones, like Richard Dragon, Kung-Fu Fighter, and Angel and the Ape — but they weren't too interested in all that. I was like, 'Thanks for trying, Pete. You're a good buddy, God bless,' and he said, 'Why don't you try some of your own characters?'

So I sent in three brief proposals, and Major Bummer was the one I wanted to do the most, but I knew they'd never go for it. I was just trying to pad it out and make it look like, 'Hey, I've got three ideas! I'm brilliant!' "

When Tomasi asked Arcudi to develop two of the springboards — including Major Bummer — Arcudi choose to work on the less-conventional Major, taking it as an opportunity to learn how to do a proposal. "I put a lot of effort in developing these characters," Arcudi said, "I thought, 'Hey, I learned a lot,' and submitted it with absolutely no expectation of anyone ever thinking twice about it."

When the group editors — Mike Carlin, Archie Goodwin, and Denny O'Neil — returned the proposal to Tomasi, the first thing he saw was the original title marked in red ink and he thought, "Uh-oh, I'm in trouble. But then I went through the rest of the proposal, and it was nothing but rave reviews and 'This could be a big hit for us' and 'Get started as soon as possible.' So I called up John and said, 'OK, we've got a go.' And he didn't believe me."

Arcudi laughed. "I said, 'Yeah, sure, that's real funny. Now what can you do for me? You got any Lobo work for me?' And he was like, 'We're approved.' And I said, 'C'mon, don't mess with me.' I wouldn't believe him until he faxed me a photocopy of the proposal with Mike, Archie, and Denny's approval scrawled all over it."

Essentially, Arcudi said, "Major Bummer is a situation comedy: Kid gets turned into super-hero by accident and he doesn't like it. A lot of people might expect this to be a one-joke title with this guy constantly running away — and he will be doing that — but as he discovers his powers, he'll get into them more and more, just not enough to want to do anything with them. When he's in a situation where he has to fight, he will, but he won't be going out looking for it. He's just like you and me if this happened to us — he's afraid of getting hurt or killed.

"Let's face it: There isn't a single comic book out there that couldn't be written from a humorous standpoint. This isn't a slam on super-hero comics, either. Anybody who reads this will know that I respect the genre, but I think it's time to play with it. I hope fans give it a chance, because I figure fans are tired of the stuff that's out there right now. I know I am. This will be something different and will become more and more different as time goes on."

Using the term in a way it usually isn't, Tomasi added, "Major Bummer is a real funny book. You'll be able to pick it up and know you're going to get laughs as you go along. The strength of it is that it isn't just a bunch of one-liners but is character-driven."

And who are the characters, the super-heroic irregulars?

Besides the super-strong, nigh-invulnerable, way-smart Lou, there's The Gecko, aka William Kryzewski. Arcudi described The Gecko as "a 26-year-old nerd wh has always fantasized about b coming a super-hero. The Geck can crawl up walls and jum around sort of like, well, th jumping, wall-crawling guy, b William didn't want to be name after an arachnid or an insect, it's The Gecko. He cannot, howe er, regenerate limbs. He's also t only character with a code nam because he's the only charact who really wants one."

Lauren Isely is a middle-ag widow with a lot of spare time her hands and a fair amount money, most of which she spen on rescuing and housing stray a hurt animals. Lauren has t power of prescience, but she's nostalgic that she rarely uses t ability effectively, Arcudi e plained. "She has visions, but s can't remember what they are b cause she's too busy thinki about things like the price bread from when she was 5 yea old. The phrase you'll hear her ter most frequently is 'I knew y were going to say that!' "

Valerie Andrist is a you woman just out of high school a out on her own. She has dreams becoming a poet laureate a fighting injustice on a glob scale, but, unfortunately, Val is much of a doer. The details of s endeavors are a little too mu dane for her, so she writes b poetry and gives money to Gre peace. When she gains the po of flight, she sees it as her tic to finally start doing someth about her dreams. The proble Arcudi said, is, when you down to it, the power of fligh pretty cool but pretty useless they had a good captain for team, maybe she could utilize powers properly, but they h

Lou.

Francis Dutton is a New Age massage therapist who can manipulate sound waves. He and Lou have the most effective powers, but Francis is too self-absorbed and Lou is just plain indifferent. Francis is very into self-awareness, homeopathy, crystals, that sort of thing.

The last member of the team is Nira, a large black cat who, like Lou, got her powers by mistake. When Nira is scared, she grows to the size of a hippo. Calm her down, rub her belly or whatever, and she returns to normal size. Not much good in a fight, Arcudi said, but good for a laugh.

On the other side of the fence — the bad guys — there's Nunzio, who only has super-strength. But what else do you need? Originally, Nunzio was going to have blasting powers, but, as Arcudi said, "What for?" Nunzio was once the low man on the totem pole of his gang but now he's not even human in appearance. Lou is terrified of Nunzio. There are a couple other villains — one with electric powers and one who can transform anything into anything else by replacing or taking away atoms.

"Then there's this guy who's super-smart," Arcudi said, "too smart; nobody can understand what the hell he's saying. And let me tell you, it takes me hours to write just a single line for this guy."

And then there's Zinnac and Yoof. It would be giving too much away (and pretty meaningless) to label Zinnac and Yoof as either heroes or villains. Suffice to say that they act as catalysts for a lot of the events in Major Bummer. Zinnac and Yoof are brothers from the planet Oraz and look like a couple of Michelin tire men who have been dipped in guacamole and allowed to dry in the sun. Something like that, anyway. These guys are ugly, intimidating, but strangely goofy. They have a kind of Laurel and Hardy relationship, Arcudi said, with Yoof being Laurel and Zinac being Hardy. Zinac has a short temper — very smart but with a short fuse. Later in the series, he'll have an excellent reason to be surly.

Artist Doug Mahnke said he's having the time of his life doing the series. "To tell the truth, Major Bummer is a lot more like what I wanted to do in comics than anything else I've done so far. I like drawing big, muscle-bound guys hitting each other. I haven't been able to do that too often. And there's even the obligatory sexy female character. I haven't done that a whole lot."

Arcudi said that he's convinced that Mahnke is the only artist who could do the series. "Doug was my first, number-one choice. A lot of guys have a standard female face and a standard male face, but with Doug every character looks like an individual. They smile differently from each other, they scream differently. We have a large ensemble cast here and I'm convinced there are people walking around Doug's neighborhood who look like these characters. Otherwise, I don't know how he comes up with these faces."

Tomasi concurred. "Doug is amazing. I just received the pencils for issue #5 and they're in-

"Major Bummer is a lot more like what I wanted to do in comics than anything else I've done so far."

— Doug Mahnke

"I think the readers are smart enough to know that [Major Bummer] is the name of the series and isn't necessarily the name of the guy inside."

credible. And we really lucked out when we got this young inker — Tom Nguyen — who has been doing amazing stuff on Doug's pencils. We had gone through a few inkers and hadn't found anyone we liked, when Doug suggested this guy from his area that he'd been trying to help out. 'Give the guy a chance,' Doug said, and it was, 'Wow!' Out of the blue — his first professional gig. Whenever you can give someone a break like that, all the better."

So, does Lou call himself Major Bummer? Arcudi said, "No, Lou doesn't call himself that. It's a reference both to Lou and his whole situation. Perhaps it's too different, but I think the readers are smart enough to know that it's the name of the series and isn't necessarily the name of the guy inside. He doesn't even wear a costume — well, once, briefly, in issue #7 to push ice cream. His costume is torn jeans and a T-shirt, which, strangely enough, is also mine."

Finally, does the series have anything to do with the rest of the DC universe? Arcudi said the answer is, "Yes and no. This is a DC universe series, but set in a town where super-heroes don't have a lot of impact. I'm trying to keep it as separate as possible from the DC universe — not because I have anything against Superman and Batman — but, if you have Superman and Batman (legitimate role models) in these kinds of stories, then it's more difficult to shirk those responsibilities. It doesn't mean that there won't be crossovers, but for the first year my hope is to build up this town, the people in it, their reactions. When something happens in Metropolis — when Mxyzptlk grows to be 400 feet tall and picks up the Daily Planet building like it's a cigar — everyone is terrified, but they're also saying, 'Jeez, when is this stuff going to stop?' But here, in my little town, they really freak out. They have no idea what to think."

Tomasi added, "I just said to John, 'Let's just be in the DC universe ballgame, and whenever you want to draw from it, you've got all these cool characters.'"

Arcudi wrapped up his comments by discussing his commitment to Major Bummer. "I promise every reader out there that I'm working harder on this than I've ever worked on anything else in my life. I've written a few things that I wasn't exactly as comfortable with as I should have been, but this is from my insides — Doug's insides, too. This stuff isn't as over-the-top as The Mask, but this is weirder and funnier.

"Not that there's anything wrong with destruction and mayhem, but this is a different kind of laugh. I've always done either high-impact comedy or drama, but this is neither fish nor fowl. Hey, I got a chance to say that. I feel like Robert Benchley."

Finding 'Finder' can be an adventure

Lightspeed Press INDIES

By Michael Cohen

If you've stumbled on an issue of Finder by Carla Speed McNeil, you're probably a bit of an explorer. Although four issues have been published, the series has yet to find its audience.

If locating a copy of Finder is an adventure, then reading it is an odyssey. Right from the first page of the first issue, McNeil drops readers into the middle of a strange, futuristic world: lushly exotic in some ways, yet filled with evocative references to bits of familiar culture; a statue of a Hindu elephant god, an Arabic-looking open-air market, a tribe of Native Americans.

"One thing he clearly isn't is a typical comic-book hero."
— Carla Speed McNeil

McNeil described the setting for Finder this way: "I don't like the term 'post-apocalyptic,' but it does get some of the idea across: lot of abandoned and semi-abandoned cities. The actual human population is very low and mostly concentrated in big-domed cities which act as biological preserves, protecting them from radiation, extremes of heat and cold, solar flares, etc.

"But it really isn't as bad outside as they think it is; their cage has become their home. On the outside are a lot of ruins and a lot of blessed empty space. There are people there, some human, some not, who generally agree on little except that they won't put up with human expansion from the cities. This has not yet really become a problem, since the populations of the cities are largely not overcrowded — yet. Jaeger, my current main character, is one of the few people who travel from city to city through 'The Barrens' (which are far from barren). He's one of these amazing nuts who can live anywhere."

As the series begins, Jaeger returns from The Barrens to the ancient city of Anvard, a jumble of cultures housed under a crumbling dome.

McNeil said that in some respects Finder is a mystery story, since Jaeger's history and motivation aren't explained, only hinted at as the story progresses. "I reveal early on that Jaeger is a Finder, but what that is is not immediately clear," McNeil added. "One thing he clearly isn't is a typical comic-book hero. There is a depth and complexity to his character which is both intriguing and puzzling.

"Jaeger began as a wish-fulfillment character. He has his roots way back in my childhood. He can do a lot of things I wish I could do. His personality followed partly from that and partly from the few real drifters, unattached people, whom I've known. Many of his really annoying traits come from a friend of mine who was instrumental in the beginnings of Finder. This part of Jaeger hasn't really come out yet and will only come out over time. Outside the cities he's a fairly contented hunter and tracker. Inside them he rapidly turns into a thug and con artist. He has a really hard time understanding why people object to this. He tries to do the right thing. But his idea of the right thing to do is not always easy to understand. He knows that there isn't much difference between a ticker-tape parade

"Comics are simply the only medium that scratches all my itches ..."
— Carla Speed McNeil

FINDER

and a lynch mob. He does 'heroic' things — when he does them — for his own peace of mind."

Jaeger's movements around the city in issue #1 give readers a tour of what appears to be an extremely complex society. McNeil said one of her strengths as a storyteller is her ability to evoke this chaotic environment with a limited amount of exposition. Some of the most intriguing elements of the story, such as the cartoonish half-human, half-animal constructs who co-mingle with the humans of Anvard, remain unexplained.

McNeil added that she is most interested in the characters, and Finder is filled with rich, believable characters.

After a bar fight, Jaeger is taken to the home of Ellen and her three eccentric children. Jaeger's history as a soldier begins to be revealed during his stay with this group, whose own history is also hinted at.

Jaeger visits a bazaar in Finder #1 where he sets up shop on a small piece of black cloth to trade some of his desert finds. The post-apocalyptic world is hinted at with bits of surviving technology.

McNeil's first comics work was as an assistant on Mike Curtis' Shanda the Panda, a series she continues to work for. McNeil said that her work on Shanda "has definitely influenced my art. 'Funny animals' were always part of Finder's background, and they're a trip to draw (although the style I use in Shanda is very different from the one I use to draw 'constructs' in Finder). I tend toward writing harsh stories and I would like to have more than that in my work. Shanda's a very light-mood series. It's funny, but my working on Shanda is darkening it up a bit. Oh, what a corrupting influence I am. But this first story of Finder's is so seeeerious. They won't all be like that."

Finder is the project McNeil said she feels she was born to tell. "I started Finder by sitting down with grim determination to draw every idea that had been putrefying in my skull since I was 6. That's what they do: If you don't write 'em down, draw 'em out. I had not the first clue how to write a story, so I figured I'd just write all of what I had out and hope I could piece 'em together. I did that for almost a year. I have this foot-high stack of character drawings, location renderings, notes, notes, notes, conversations between characters, and feverish wailings about how to make 'em all into a story that anybody but my mother would want to read."

McNeil's interests and influences go way beyond comics. Some of her non-comics influences include: Octavia Butler, Terry Pratchett, Michael Swanwick, Alfred Hitchcock, the Coen brothers, Robert Graves, Nicholas Pileggi, Oliver Sacks, Peter Gabriel, Philip Glass, Mark Twain, Victor Hugo, Francesca Lia Block, and Caroline Cooney.

"I like neurology and the weird things the brain can do to perception," she said. "I like anthropology and history and comparative religion. I like folklore and the persistence of culture. I like psychology and genealogy and pop culture. I like sociology and paleozoology and physical phenotypes. I guess what I'm most interested in is people's perspectives — how do they see themselves, their lives, their pasts, other people? — where those perspectives came from, what went into making them."

When asked if comics were the best forum for her to deal with these topics she replied, "Gallery art is image-only; it didn't cover my itch to write. Illustration's much the same and far too commercial, besides; the book and magazine world is so intensely competitive that, in essence, you end up doing a very small amount of work even if you do break through and become a success. Animation is fascinating to me, but that's a field in which even the biggest wheels in the machine are still very teeny little cogs, and the work they do is highly specialized — I'd still just be writing or just be animating figures or painting backgrounds or whatever.

"Comics are simply the only medium that scratches all my itches (well, even if it doesn't cover everything; it doesn't cover sound or movement, but it's the best possible compromise). Comics have great potential, and I think I'm very fortunate to be getting into them now."

McNeil said she intends to keep self-publishing on a bi-monthly schedule, giving her time to continue another Finder-related project, "Mystery Date," which has run in several issues of Mythography, an anthology title published by Bardic Press. "Mystery Date" follows the adventures of Vary, a student at an unusual college, who has developed a relationship with two extremely unusual professors.

McNeil said, "The characters of 'Mystery Date' will figure into Finder in time. The two professors have a chunk of the puzzle to relate. But that won't be for a while, and they'll all be older when they do show up in Finder. They were essentially peripheral characters, people my main character sometimes worked for. But somehow they turned out to have a story or three in them."

As for her long-term plans for Finder, McNeil said, "This first story was supposed to be a short thing. I had so little idea what I was doing when I started it; now I'm just hanging on as it continues to inflate. My short-story work is much stronger, I think, and I hope to break the big main story of Finder into several shorts per issue so I won't lose so many of these interesting side stories. Finder itself is an open-ended series of stories, not all of which will focus on the same characters. The term Finder doesn't refer only to the current main character. What I want is to have a big enough scenario that I can tell any kind of story that I like. I will, naturally, reprint the issues someday in collected form and let the issues slide. I want good-quality hardcovers for my shelf. I want books."

For those unable to find Finder at their local shop, copies of all four issues are available from McNeil at Lightspeed Press, 1452 Middletown Rd., Annapolis, MD, 21401 for $3 each.

The above comes from the nigh-legendary Robert Kanigher/Ross Andru/Mike Esposito classic "I Married a Robot." According to an enticing cover blurb, this decades-old comic book features "The Mad Tale Even Electronic Brains Are Reading." It costs me two bucks at the Heroes Convention in Charlotte, N.C., and, although I make no claims to being a brain, electronic or otherwise, I am looking forward to kicking back in a comfortable chair and reading this slice of Silver Age heaven.

The Metal Men of decades past were all about good, goofy fun, and, for the most part, that's what I had at the Heroes Convention. Promoters Shelton and Cynthia Drum put on a family-, fan-, and pro-friendly event. I think it would have been positively rude not to have had a good time at it.

Fellow CBG columnist Bob Ingersoll and I made the [classified]-hour drive to Charlotte on the Thursday before the convention, so as to be bright and cheerful on opening day. Since I slept most of the way, I could not testify with certainty that our distinguished counselor ever went so much as a titch — a legal term meaning "Oh, please, officer, give me a break" — above the speed limit. All I know is that we left on a Thursday morning and arrived the previous day. Go figure.

The opening of the Heroes Convention found Bob and me hanging out at the CBG booth with Publisher Greg Loescher, Editor Maggie Thompson, and doomed Ensign — I mean Advertising Sales Manager — Jim Felhofer. Our mission for the day was to whip up con-attendee enthusiasm for the CBG panel that afternoon and the presentation of the 15th Annual CBG Fan Awards that evening. We also tried to see how many times we could make Maggie roll her eyes in consternation. There were times — especially when The Bobster and I were being bad influences on Greg — she looked like a slot machine.

Peter David's flight had been delayed, but he was still able to join Maggie, Bob, and me for the intimate gathering that was the CBG panel. When Peter arrived, he was presented with the first of several watches he would be given over the course of the weekend. And, yes, I will explain this to you.

It started when an Internet troll (i.e., someone who posts absurd or insulting messages for seemingly no other reason than to try to get a rise out of his target) started claiming Peter demands expensive perks from convention promoters in exchange for his appearance at their shows. I've known Peter for a long time, so I know what a cheap date he really is.

Anyway, our guy "revealed" that one promoter had been forced to give Peter an expensive watch to get Peter to come to his show. Naturally, he had no actual evidence of this. Naturally, it didn't particularly matter to him.

Well, not one to pass up a chance to play a prank on Peter — I once, years ago and for reasons that now escape me, convinced several fans to send empty pizza boxes to him at Marvel Comics — I came up with the notion of folks giving him watches this weekend. Broken watches, cheap watches, Burger King Jurassic Park watches, you name it. He even got a Gummi watch. I think he ended up with seven or eight watches by the end of the con and seemed especially delighted with his mint condition, albeit non-functioning, Defiant Comics watch. I can hardly wait to read what our favorite Internet troll makes of this.

Peter was also master of ceremonies for the CBG Fan Awards, which were held later that evening. I was resplendent in a giant paper tie made for me by my darling daughter Kelly. She had made me promise to wear it at the convention. I'd originally intended to wear it when publisher Greg took us out to dinner, but it just seemed too formal for McDonald's.

Before the awards ceremony, I had made my annual predictions of the winners. I got eight out of 15. (There were 14 categories, but there was a tie for Favorite Editor.) Of course, if you look at who I voted for, as opposed to who won, it drops to five out of 15. You voters will have to do better next year.

The second day of the Heroes Convention was just as much fun as the first. I did some shopping for presents for my kids: Eddie got an Independence Day book and several issues of G.I. Combat with The Haunted Tank; Kelly got a Sailor Moon backpack. I hung out at the CBG booth, chatting with my fellow fans and pros and signing a bunch of comics I'd written.

I was happy to have some good news to share with these folks. The first such item was the launching of my new daily column at the website of World Famous Comics, an online comic-book store and art gallery. Tony Isabella's Journal started appearing June 16 and seems to be attracting a fair amount of visitors. It's not meant to replace this weekly column, which remains among the most satisfying work I've ever done in my 25 years in comics, but to supplement it with news and reviews I can't fit into these pages. Look for it at: www.wfcomics.com.

The second bit of welcome news was that, thanks to the uncanny editorial sagacity of DC Editor Darren Vincenzo, I have written my first new Black Lightning story in over two years. It will appear in the second DC Universe Holiday Bash, on sale later this year, illustrated by my friend and collaborator, Eddy Newell. I couldn't be happier. Not only did I get to return to my favorite creation, not only do I get to work with Eddy again, but I got to write my first Christmas story — and for a company that has a long history of publishing wonderful holiday-themed tales. If I smile much wider, my face will probably get stuck like this.

Earlier in this column, I wrote that, for the most part, I had good, goofy fun at Heroes Convention. That ominous phrase is known as foreshadowing, which, as we know, is the universally recognized mark of literary excellence.

I had just done an hour of hanging with the CBG crew, chatting with my readers, and making animals with the leftover balloons from the Fan Awards. OK, I can only make one balloon animal — and it's a tadpole — but it was a pretty funny shtick the first three or four times I did it.

I ran into an old friend and we started updating each other on what we'd been doing since our last encounter. He has a staff job with a major publisher.

During the course of our conversation, which wasn't very long, he took a really cheap shot at a creator with whom I'm working. It was a thoughtless remark that, had it been overheard, could have had a detrimental effect on the creator's livelihood. It was probably meant in jest, but there was just enough meanness in the comment to give me pause. I let it slide.

Minutes later, as we walked through the convention, I stopped to say hello to one of my clients. My old friend asked what work I was doing for said client, a comics editor, and I told him that I was "writing" the letters column for one of the editor's titles.

He seemed shocked. How, he asked, does it look for me to be doing that kind of work? I mumbled some sort of answer and then found an excuse to take my leave of him.

What I should have told him is that it looks like I'm a writer who attempts to treats every assignment in a professional manner. I enjoy putting together these letters columns, I like the editors I'm working with, and the pay is good. It never occurred to me, and I don't believe it now, that this work was somehow beneath me.

But, then again, I'm not looking at the gig from the perspective of a guaranteed weekly paycheck.

I don't think I have a particularly thin skin. I've been in this business for two and a half decades and I'm used to a certain insensitivity from some staff people. In my younger days, when I was on staff, I doubtless exhibited similar behavior. I would like to believe I've aged well. It just struck me that, in this setting of convention camaraderie, such conduct was a jarring note. Yes, there has always been a bit of the "them vs. us" mentality in the freelancer-staffer dynamic, but, at this crucial point in our industry's history, do we really need it at all?

However, I wouldn't want you to think for an instant that this one individual could ruin my enjoyment of Shelton's and Cynthia's gala event. Within the hour, I had one of those experiences that simply makes a convention for a writer.

I'll tell you about it next week.

Tony Isabella, "America's most beloved comic–book writer and columnist," would like to extend a belated, but heartfelt, "Happy Birthday" to the known universe's most beloved comic-book editor, the legendary Julius Schwartz. Julie was 82 years old this month and should be declared a national treasure. Somebody get the White House on the phone.

• July 23: DC designated July as "JLA Month," and JLA Secret Files #1 will wrap it up, written by Grant Morrison and Mark Millar, pencilled by Howard Porter, and inked by John Dell. DC said it would be "one of the most sought-after books of all during JLA Month." It will contain 31 new pages of stories, there will be two editions, and DC said it's the first of "a new series of specials" and indicated that there won't be a JLA Secret Files #2 — at least, not right away, since this is designed as a 64-page one-shot at $4.95.

The set-up is that yucky, drooly, face-hugging aliens in combination with The JLA could mean the end of the universe. So the question is how The JLA can remove itself from the conflict but still eliminate the menace.

The story would have been just as fine without Flash's gratuitous "God!" exclamations and maybe even without the face-huggers' drool (though that, combined with the creatures' revolting eye design, certainly could be effectively nightmare-inducing for younger readers). The intellectual challenge is intriguing — and The Spectre plays a logical, active role in The JLA (a group in which he doesn't always fit well).

• Aug. 6: The Flintstones and the Jetsons #3 is represented in these photocopies only by a Jetsons story which depends a lot on diaper jokes. It's written by Michael Kupperman and drawn by Bill Wray. Elroy provides George with fluid for a practical joke to turn his boss, Mr. Spacely, into a baby. The story vacillates between whether Spacely is a baby with no toilet training or an articulate (mustached) adult with concerns over a business meeting. But who could complain about inconsistencies in a story based on Hanna-Barbera-based characters?

It's gooney and looney, and young readers either won't care about the illogicalities — or will obsess on them. More likely: The diaper-changing jokes will have them in a state of hilarity, distracting them from any quibbles.

• Aug. 6: Supergirl Annual #2 is another entry in DC's "Pulp Heroes" annuals theme. There are two stories, the lead written by Tom Peyer, pencilled by Anthony Castrillo, and inked by Jordi Ensign. The back-up is by Chuck Dixon, pencilled by Greg Land, and inked by Prentis Rollins.

So what is it with this "Pulp Heroes" theme? The titles — each 64 pages priced at $3.95 — started shipping in May, and the explanation in solicitations was that "before there were even comic books, there were the pulps: cheaply produced, often-garish stories of heroes and villains of all styles and genres. [To pay] tribute to its pulp ancestors ... [DC characters] take part in stylized adventures unlike any before." Each title will feature a character in "one of six genres: Western, Romance, Weird Mystery, Hard-Boiled, Macabre, and High-Adventure." Each of the 23 issues carries self-contained stories.

Readers may wonder what marketing purpose could be served by a tribute to a magazine type that few in the audience, not to mention few of the creators involved, know much about. (Remember, the "often-garish" stories were frequently some of the best work by such writers as Ray Bradbury, L. Ron Hubbard, John D. MacDonald, and Robert A. Heinlein — and stories were decorated by such outstanding artists as Hannes Bok, Virgil Finlay, Frank Kelly Freas, and Edd Cartier.)

The project could give DC an idea of the potential market for a combination of stand-alone stories and genres you don't see much these days. If Western titles or Romance titles or Macabre titles, say, do especially well, it might be worthwhile to produce more. Should DC do more? What has been produced so far has provided some solid entertainment.

The Supergirl version is supposed to place her in stories appropriate for a romance pulp — and the title of the Peyer story, "I Led Him On," fits the theme. Once past the title, though, it's not particularly evocative of pulp treatment, as Brainiac obsesses on Supergirl, who is more concerned initially with her home life. And that's going none too well, as everything around her suddenly goes wildly wrong.

The opening of the Dixon tale is more lurid — and there's a reason. Lush pin-up Supergirl art by Land and Rollins totally supports the story so far.

• Aug. 6: Elseworlds' Finest #1 is written by John Franice Moore, pencilled by Kieron Dwyer, and inked by Hilary Barta — and the skills of the participants make this a must-have for collectors. It's Part One of a two-issue mini-series, each issue with 48 pages priced at $4.95.

It's elegant adventure that combines many facets of the DC universe, past and present.

Jimmy Olsen, for example, is a member of the (not-so-named) Newsboy Legion — and the world of the '20s is an environment in which world-spanning, swashbuckling adventure is a natural for characters DC has described as "naive reporter Clark Kent," "fiercely independent" Lana Lang, and "adventurer-for-hire Bruce Wayne."

A problem with some Elseworlds "novels" comes with those whose reason for existence is endless retelling of a Batman or Superman origin story: in the Old West, in a medieval world, etc. This two-parter focuses on the terrific idea of telling an exciting story which stands on its own — with a bonus of character sources from the DC world of past and present.

This, frankly, could be a successful ongoing series — especially if this creative team continues to produce it. Different characters, different backgrounds, same ambiance: It's been a winning concept for the comics field for decades.

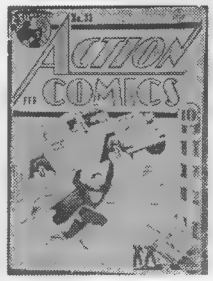
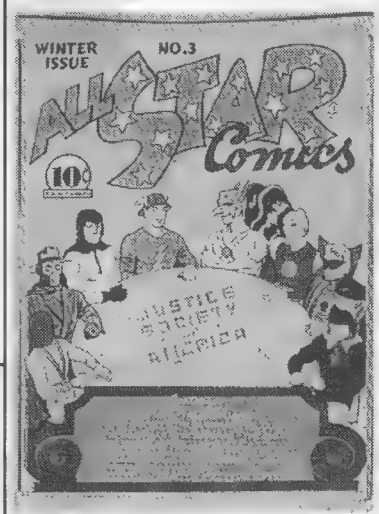
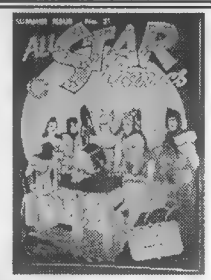
Lot 1 Action Comics #17
Great early Action issue beginning with a classic cover depicting Superman battling some German tanks (one of comics' earliest war covers) A nice, solid, and unrestored copy with minimal wear, but top part of book has some water staining and warping Staples are rusty. Otherwise a clean copy that is still unrestored and very collectible. Pages are cream. A strong VG. .....MB $200



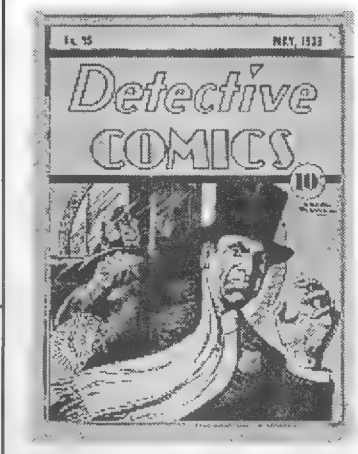
Lot 2 Action Comics #33
Early issue with the origin of Mr. America. Nice flat copy with 1" splits at top and bottom of spine; bottom spine appears to have minor, hidden glue repair. Otherwise a very clean VG book with little to no surface wear and just a few tiny edge tears Call it a GD+. .....MB $70



Lot 3 All-Star Comics #3
Very important and historical first appearance of JSA. This book signaled the arrival of the superhero team-up concept, an important facet of the comics world that has lasted up to the present day. A strong mid-grade copy that has been cleaned and pressed with the staples reinforced by Susan Cicconi. Tiny professional color touch at spine area. Otherwise a near high grade copy with just two ½" edge tears keeping it out of a higher grade. Desirable off-white to light cream paper. Fantastic copy with very little work! Apparent FN. ..... MB $1,500



Lot 4 All-Star Comics #21
A gorgeous high grade copy of this early issue. Staples are off-center and thus about .25" in off the spine to the front cover side (not a defect). Spine has minimal stress marks with no other flaws. Bold colors and no surface wear. Mostly a NM appearance with supple cream paper that is tanning on the very tips, overall a beautiful VF .....MB $300

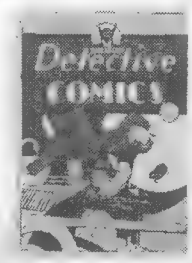


Lot 9 Detective Comics #15
Who can ever forget this diabolical fiend cover rendered by the great Flessel? Prehero Detectives remain the toughest to find and most sought after of all comics, hands down! This is a solid unrestored copy with surprisingly nice and supple cream pages Book is flat and clean with minimal surface wear and a great cover image Small piece of tape (which has not aged) on inside cover prevents a higher grade, though the appearance of this beauty speaks for itself! VG overall .....MB $500

Lot 6 Batman #10
Flat and colorful copy of this classic early issue Book has a minor spine roll with some spine wear and a small chip out at the center spine. Logo shows very faint, invisible ink marks. ½" chip out lower right corner Right front cover edge has .5" sun shadow Still a GD/VG . .....MB $200

Lot 7 Batman #13
Everyone's favorite early Batman cover with that great black background and the two superheroes parachuting down to the targets. A solid example with neat amateurish reinforcement with white paper at top spine and both staples-, easily hidden when viewing just the front cover. Pen name on cover that is unbtrusive, cream pages and great colors Overall a strong VG- .....MB $200

Lot 8 Batman #24
Early issue of the revered superhero title Cover has been pressed with some nice paper reinforcement at inside spine, light subscription crease and 1" tear sealed on back cover edge. Mostly FN front cover appearance with no major defects, comes in overall at VG- with cream pages .....MB $70

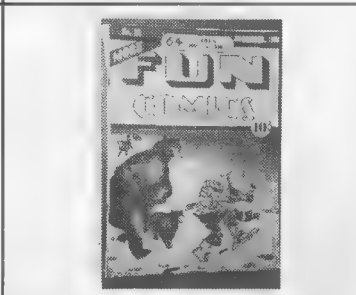


Lot 10 Detective Comics #34
One of the tougher of the pre-Batman Detectives, the last 34 we auctioned was a GD with heavy tape and it realized $770. This is a flat, fresh, and supple restored copy with only light work to the spine area with some minor color touch. Pages are pleasingly light cream and very supple. A very beautiful copy at an affordable price! Apparent VF .....MB $300

Lot 11 Detective Comics #62
Joker's first cover appearance and a memorable Batman/Joker face-off story make this the desirable issue that it is A nice early Detective with an excellent cover image with little to no surface wear. Tears at both staples; upper staple is detached Still a fresh copy with strong colors and nice light cream pages. A nice VG .....MB $200

Lot 12 Flash Comics #5
Underrated and undervalued tough to find early issue Book has nice colors and would be a strong VG, but cover is cleanly detached. Pages are light cream. With some minor restoration, this book would easily have a FN/VF appearance, overall a solid GD/VG MB $200

Lot 13 More Fun Comics #32
Collectors just can't seem to get enough of these pre-hero More Funs, being among DC's earliest and hardest to find comics. Of special note to this issue, however, is the ad for Action 1 on the inside cover, making this one of the first printed appearances of Superman, and obviously an undervalued and historic offering. This copy is a rock solid VG with nice colors and cream pages, minimal overall wear, however an inch of clear tape (which hasn't yet stained) is present at the bottom spine, preventing a higher grade. Still great eye-appeal! Overall rates a nice VG .. ...MB $200



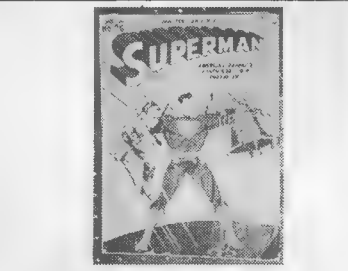
Lot 14 More Fun Comics #38
Tough pre-hero DC from last year's Louisiana find of early DC books. A fresh copy with 1 5" spine split at top and light-colored but extensive foxing to front and back covers Supple cream interior, rare for books of this vintage. A very solid overall VG- .....MB $200

Lot 15 More Fun Comics #100
Many experts consider this to be the toughest issue in the run. This copy is very well preserved and would be high grade, except for insect damage to three spots of the cover only: 1.5" x .5" at bottom right front cover, .25" x .25" at bottom spine of back cover, and 1" x .5" at bottom left back cover, otherwise a flat, clean and brilliantly colorful copy, overall GD with near white pages ...MB $50

Lot 16 More Fun Comics #105
Undervalued fifth ever appearance of Superboy. Cover has nice paper at inside spine staples, and two .75" tears sealed at right edge of front cover. Still a clean and fairly attractive book with cream pages. Rates GD/VG overall .....MB $50

Lot 17 New Comics #8
Historic and scarce early issue from DC's first regular format title. An appealing copy with strong color, spine has had adhesive repair with few other defects to note. Pages show signs of tanning, but are still flexible. Call it an overall GD/VG .....MB $150

Lot 18 Superman #8
Nice early Supes issue. Covers are very attractive, pages are cream to very faint tan but still supple. Spine has some faint glue repair that is not visible except under close inspection. Otherwise very nice appearance with no tears or chips, call it overall VG- .....MB $200

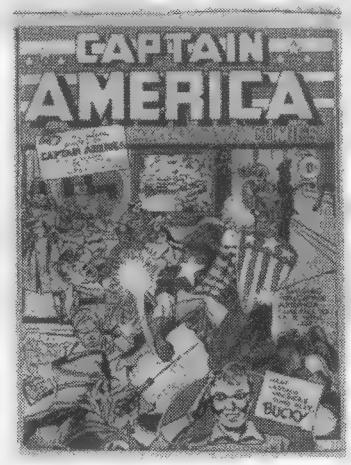


Lot 19 Superman #26
Classic Mussolini "Radio Berlin" cover with Superman and the liberty bell A very decent lower grade copy with three small cover chips (approx. .25"), average spine and edge wear, and some surface wear with three small front cover ink stamps. Overall wear makes this a GD+ copy, but inside pages are miraculously white! .....MB $70

UNIVERSAL 15th AUCTION • JULY 10 • (860) 561-1405

Lot 20 Superman #53
Classic and very historic origin issue with what many feel is the best cover of the run. Book has a FN appearance with very little wear. Some light overall spine wear. .25" piece amateurishly but neatly replaced on the bottom right corner of the front cover. No other restoration work done. Pages are supple and cream. If not for repair, would be a VG/FN. Still an attractive VG ..... MB $200

Lot 21 Tomahawk #1
Solid and appealing copy of this tough '50's DC number one issue. Nice VG or better appearance, but back cover spine area and right/lower right front cover have narrow areas of insect chews to the cover only. Otherwise has little to no surface wear with nice colors and supple cream pages. Call it a GD+ with a better front cover appearance ..... MB $100



Lot 22 Captain America Comics #1
Cap makes his spectacular debut as only Cap could do it; with a crushing blow to Hitler's jaw. Simon and Kirby bring this patriotic superhero to life, and a long and prosperous life Cap would live in comicdom, continuing to this day. One of the ten most desirable comics in the entire hobby! Book has had moderate restoration by Matt Wilson, including page cleaning and some slight mending to the pages, spine reinforcement, small chip replacement and color touching. This copy has great appeal and makes for one awesome display! Apparent FN+ ..... MB $5,000

Lot 23 Captain America Comics #11
Cap leads the way again with a powerful sock on this high-demand early issue. Book has light restoration mostly to the spine area, with some minor color touch and reinforcement. Right edge has two 3" diagonal creases that are pressed out and therefore hidden. Pages are supple cream with some very faint edge tanning, inside cover edges also are very lightly tanned. Really a beautiful-looking early issue with great display potential. A nice Apparent FN+ ..... MB $250

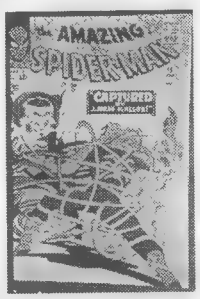
Lot 24 Hit Comics #9
Awesome Lou Fine cover featuring his trademark hero, the Red Bee. A glossy copy with only general light surface wear. Bindary chip at bottom spine and a light subscription crease. Very supple and appealing off-white paper. Glossy cover. Rates an appealing VG ..... MB $150

Lot 25 Planet Comics #40
Intergalactic good-girl/alien cover. A nice, flat copy with just minimal spine wear. Upper right corner of front cover is faded away approx 2.5" x .5" due to sun exposure. Still a tight book with nice appeal and light cream pages. Strict VG overall ..... MB $50

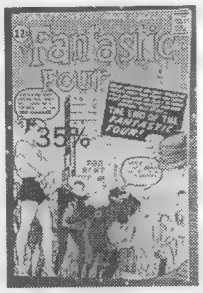
Lot 26 Sub-Mariner Comics #1
A strong unrestored copy of this ultra-important Timely key. Book has nice cover appeal and image with overall surface wear. .5" color flake on back cover Small piece out of spine right above top staple. Supple cream pages; centerfold is married from another copy and is tanning and detached. No cover chips or tears! Grades a super-solid VG- ..... MB $1,000

Lot 27 Weird Tales of the Future #2
Classic cover exemplifying Wolverton's awesome talent with his trademark monster creature destroying a carefully illustrated city Excellent cover image for the grade; spine has heavy wear and stress, though no splits. Two chips out of back cover side of spine near the center spine area Non-obtrusive 2" x 2" water stain to lower right corner of the entire book Still a glossy copy with supple light cream pages. An overall GD+ ..... MB $100

Lot 28 Amazing Spider-Man #23
Early Green Goblin appearance with an ultra-tough-in-high-grade white cover. Flat, newsstand fresh copy with a tight spine that shows very little stress. Has eye appeal of NM or better, however lower right has a few tiny, near-invisible clear stains only visible when the book is held in the light. Again, this book really is almost in the NM range. Cream pages. Call it VF/NM overall ..... MB $100

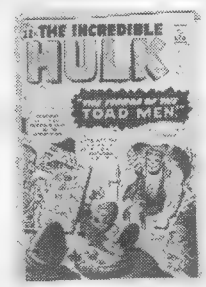


Lot 29 Amazing Spider-Man #25
A stellar high grade copy of this high demand early issue. Tight staples and brilliant colors dominate this gem- pages are cream. Minute spine flaws make this a VF/NM, but cover definitely has a NM appearance ..... MB $100

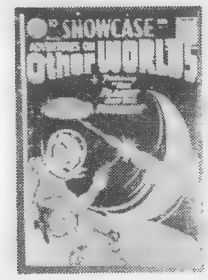


Lot 30 Fantastic Four #9
This early FF issue is an ultra toughie in high grade. A strong copy that would grade NM, save for about five small spine stress lines, and light impact stress at the lower right corner tip. Glossy, fresh and colorful with cream pages Rates a VF+ ..... MB $250

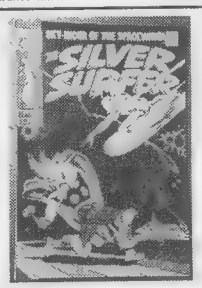
Lot 31 Fantastic Four Annual #2
Brilliant white cover rarely seen in high grade. A glossy, fresh copy with just some light wear at the bottom edge due to overhang, and slight surface scuff to lower right corner. Otherwise has definite NM appeal and quality with cream pages. Still a beautiful VF/NM ..... MB $200



Lot 32 Incredible Hulk #2
The second mighty issue of this all-time great title, with Kirby and Ditko art, cover to cover! This issue is considerably tougher to find than some of the other Marvel second issues. This is a strong VG copy with general surface wear and nice light cream paper ..... MB $100



Lot 33 Showcase #17
This first appearance of Adam Strange is one of the toughest of the early Showcases. A strong, flat copy with general surface and spine wear. Some creases adjacent to the spine Still, no tears or pieces missing Pages are a dark shade of cream and very supple Solid VG ..... MB $100



Lot 34 Silver Surfer #4
Very high demand low distribution issue with an ideal, perfect spine with absolutely no wrinkling. Really a newsstand fresh copy with just some very, very slight stress wear to right edge, not really visible and mentioned only for accuracy. Supple cream pages with slight yellowing. Many would call this baby NM, we'll say a strict NM- ..... MB $150

Lot 35 Strange Tales #114
Forget Avengers #4, this is Cap's REAL first Silver Age appearance To boot, this book is infinitely harder to find in high grade! If any Silver Age books are undervalued, this one ranks right on top. A superb high grade book with just a few horizontal spine stress marks. Flat and glossy cover with brilliant colors. Faint date stamp on lower right that is easily missed. Still rates a gorgeous VF/NM ..... MB $150

Lot 36 X-Men #2
An appealing near high grade copy of the second issue of this important Silver Age title. A great bargain compared to some of the other Marvel second issues like Spidey #2, Fantastic Four #2, etc. Great gloss and brilliant colors. Spine has some horizontal stress marks. Tiny split at top of spine. Otherwise a nearly defect free copy with cream pages. Grades a nice FN/VF ..... MB $200

Lot 37 X-Men Giant Size #1
If you've been waiting for that "just right" Giant Size 1 to come along, here it is! This probably ties for the best copy I've seen. Stark white cover with brilliant colors and gloss. Sharp corners Spine shows no wear, however it is not quite perfectly square because of some slight wrinkling from the binding process. Back cover is equally as powerful. Off-white to light cream paper. NM all the way! ..... MB $200

Lot 38 Action Comics #18
A nice lower grade copy of the last non-Superman cover. Tough to find early issue. Cover has general surface and edge wear and spine has some splitting. Pages are light tan and supple, though some are splitting partially at the spine. Nice appearance. Rates a respectable GD- ..... MB $100

Lot 39 Detective Comics #8
Just the hands-down best pre-hero cover, with that classic image of Mr. Chang that will leave you in awe. A very solid restored copy with an excellent appearance, only surface wear keeping it out of the FN range. Spine reinforcement, color touch, and edge repairs overall moderate restoration. Still a very desirable, clean, and collectible copy of this classic issue. Nice unrestored cream paper ..... MB $500

Lot 40 Detective Comics #37
The last issue of that great run from 27-37 before the Boy Wonder made his debut. Demand for those pre-Robin Detec's never seems to cease, undoubtedly due to their scarcity and great early Batman artwork. This is a strong copy with moderate professional restoration, mostly spine reinforcement and color touch. Interior pages have been cleaned. A very pretty copy of this highly desirable book. Apparent FN+ ..... MB $700

Lot 41 New York World's Fair 1939
Highly important and desirable first appearance of Sandman (much more undervalued than Adventure 40). A flat and glossy copy with just the average cardboard cover stress creasing seen on virtually all copies of this and other cardboard cover books. Pages are cream. No outstanding flaws, tears or pieces missing, nice cream paper. Comes in at a strong VG- ..... MB $900

Lot 42 Marvel Mystery Comics #88
Those later issues of Marvel Mystery are just so tough to find. This is a rock solid VG with just general wear and cream paper ..... MB $100

Lot 43 X-Men #1
This Marvel premier issue has always been a great buy in the Silver Age marketplace. This is a nice copy with brilliant colors and cream paper; book has some general wear and would grade VG- if not for few ink marks in the cover; though they are in the artwork; they are mostly unobtrusive. Still a very sound and affordable copy. Call it a GD/VG ..... MB $200

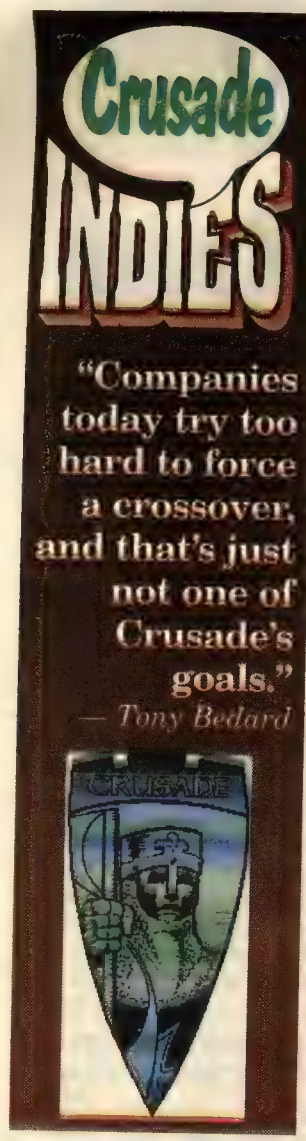
'Shi' is at the forefront of a monthly Crusade



By Mike Renegor
For Crusade

In August, Crusade's Shi will go monthly. Shi creator Billy Tucci, writer Tony Bedard, and artist Jeff Jones spoke recently about commitment, quality, and taking Shi to the next level.

CBG: Why did you decide to take Shi monthly?

Billy Tucci: I guess our biggest reason was that the fans demanded it. Most people don't know it, but I spend most of my time running the business. I also write and illustrate the bimonthly Shi series. These functions take up a majority of my time, so when the fans asked for more Shi, I had to sit back and figure out the best way to do it.

I've had the feeling that I've been holding Crusade and Shi back from their true potential because of my workload. But, despite that handicap, Shi still grows in popularity. It's as though Shi has taken a life of her own and is reaching new readers every day. With a regular series we feel that we can finally give the fans what they've been asking for in a comic book. Every day we get tons of phone calls saying, "We want more Shi!" and I keep wanting to yell, "I just can't draw more!"

So with the creative team we have established, I feel the regular series can't help but be a hit. We've put a great team together, now it's time to unleash them on the fans! [Laughter.]

CBG: How will you maintain a monthly schedule?

Tucci: Crusade is starting to become a powerful, well-oiled machine. We've looked back at our mistakes and learned from them. That's why we waited so long on the regular series: We still had things to learn. Our philosophy now is: no more empty promises; we're going to put our money where our mouth is. That's our commitment. It's very exciting.

Tony Bedard: I'll let you know in four months. [Laughter.] Seriously, they are guaranteed to ship on certain dates and that's when they ship. Even if it kills Jeff.

Jeff Jones: Hey, wait a minute!

CBG: How did the creative team get together?

Jones: Tony introduced my work to Billy when I was finishing Fatale. They later came to me to do the two Rekishi issues with Caesas. They must have liked what they saw because we were then moved to Tomoe and, eventually, the monthly Shi.

CBG: You're not the Jeff Jones, are you?

Jones: No, I'm not the famous Jeff Jones whom fans remember from the '70s, although he was one of my heroes growing up. I also tried to imitate Barry Windsor-Smith and even tried to paint like Frank Frazetta. I eventually got into comics when Jim Shooter gave me a job at Defiant illustrating Dark Dominion. After that, I began working on my own series, Rant, with Jonathan Larson. That, unfortunately, didn't pan out.

Shooter later hired me to work on Fatale at Broadway Comics, and, just before that assignment ended, Tony asked me to come over and take a look at Crusade. That hooked me. I've done three books so far for Crusade: Rekishi I and II and Tomoe: Unforgettable Fire. When Billy asked me to illustrate Shi monthly, I was flattered that he would trust me with his creation.

CBG: With a regular Shi series and special bimonthly comics, will there be any inter-company crossover stories?

Bedard: I would say probably not for a while. We really want to develop the series first and don't want to sacrifice the story for the sake of continuity. Too many times companies try to "link" it all together. Gone are the days when it was a natural occurrence. Companies today try too hard to force a crossover, and that's just not one of Crusade's goals.

CBG: What about the stories themselves? Unlike a mini-series, a regular series can have many stories within stories. Will the new Shi series be any different?

Bedard: We think it will be really different. We'll continue exploring Shi's background, as well as that of the Sohei, her warrior clan. We'll also take a look at some of the characters from Way of the Warrior. People like Arashi.

Tucci: We have so many new characters to introduce. Shi is not about one woman; it's about a story that Crusade has to tell.

Jones: And it's a story that the whole creative team has to tell. It's not just Billy's story, it's our story. The team works to give the comics life, and each person contributes to create the final prod-

Tia Carrere helps launch Shi Revolution at San Diego

Film star Tia Carrere has signed on as part of Crusade's Shi Revolution, with plans to sign copies of Shi: The Series Sneak Preview Teaser at Comic-Con International: San Diego Saturday, July 19, from 1 to 3 p.m. The 16-page preview of the monthly series has a photo-cover featuring Carrere.

Shi creator Billy Tucci said, "We wanted something really big to kick off the Shi Revolution and we knew that Tia was a fan of the series, so it was only natural that we ask her to be there at the beginning."

Carrere has also expressed interest in playing Shi in a live-action movie, and Tucci said, "I've always pictured Tia as Shi, so I was thrilled when she agreed to support us in San Diego. Tia and I have a lot of great things planned for Shi in the near future and I want to invite everyone to join us in San Diego for the start of the Shi Revolution."

In addition to the preview of Shi: The Series, Crusade plans previews of Shi: Nightstalkers, Shi: Vampirella, and Shi: East Wind Rain at San Diego.

SHI MONTHLY

uct. It really is an exciting process to be a part of.

CBG: What is the first story arc about?

Bedard: It has just about everything a fan would want. Mystical figures, demons, weapons of mass destruction, and two beautiful women play very important roles in the first arc. The story follows a doomsday cult that is led by an ancient Japanese demon — which is deadlier than an ancient American demon.

CBG: Do you have any big plans for the launch of the series?

Tucci: We've produced a 12-page color preview that has a very limited print run. Those comics are really for the retailers so they can get a feel for the new series. Besides that, we will advertise the series as usual. Crusade has felt for a long time that the time for showmanship is over. It's now "put up or shut up." We are committed to the comics and to getting those issues into the fans' hands. Only then will they notice a difference in Crusade.

Bedard: I agree. We'll do the normal conventions, signings, and ads, but our goal with the new series is to let the work speak for itself. I think the industry is tired of the hype. Fans just want good comics, and that's what Crusade is going to give them.

CBG: Tony, since you'll be starting the regular series, are you nervous about what you think the fans will expect?

Bedard: No. I know what the limits are with this character and I won't violate them. Shi will remain mysterious, aloof, and unattainable. The stories in the regular series will develop these aspects and give readers a better idea of who Shi really is and what her motivations are. I think this is one of the areas that fans will enjoy, because in a sense, it rounds out the character and makes us feel as though we are part of the story.

Tucci: I think Tony has a good point. A regular series allows readers to learn more of the subtle characteristics of the character as opposed to a mini-series, where you sometimes have to cram things in to make it work.

CBG: What has been the response?

Bedard: The retailer response so far has been great. More and more retailers and fans are asking us, "Why didn't you do this sooner?" or, "I have customers who are going to be thrilled!" It's been a very positive thing for Crusade. We hope to live up to everyone's expectations. We know it's going to be an adjustment at first, but, because we have some experience under our belts, we think we will be running smoothly from the get go.

CBG: Will we see a monthly Tomoe series?

Bedard: Not right now, but she will appear in the regular series frequently. We've had a lot of good responses about Tomoe, so she will definitely factor into Shi's future.

CBG: If you could do anything to the character Shi or create any kind of story with Shi, what would you do?

Bedard: I would probably like to do an in-depth exploration of Arashi's past in the Yakuza. I think there is a wealth of stories in just that idea alone. At some point I would also like to take a behind-the-scenes look at the Kyoto Sohei sect.

Jones: Luckily, I think we are taking the character in the direction which I'm most interested in: darker, more mysterious stories and tones. Elements of the supernatural and lots of shadows are the things I enjoy.

Tucci: I'm doing it.

'Taking what interests you and making it your own':

A short interview with 'Humongous Man' creators Jim Harrison and Dan Stepp

By Jeff Mason

Humongous Man, a bimonthly black and white series from Alternative Press is scheduled to begin in September. Produced by Jim Harrison and Dan Stepp's Ikon Press studio, the 32-page comic book retails for $2.25.*

CBG: How did Humongous Man get its start?*

Dan Stepp: A few years ago Dick Giordano, at a show nearby, took a look at the first pages we had begun messing with and said, "Wow, this is great." That was it. From two pages he could see that we were not just messing around with another stale super-hero concept. It was validation from an industry icon that we were on the right path.

Jim Harrison: So then we took a couple of years off. [Laughter.] No, we finished what we were doing: I finished design school and Dan went off to get his Masters in painting from the New York Academy of Art. It was a good that we did it that way, because what we bring to the table apart from comics and cartooning is a big part of why we have found success.

Stepp: Then we chained ourselves down for the long haul.

Harrison: Yep. And now we have this story that's a cross between Blade Runner, ancient Rome, pulp film noir, and classic superhero stuff.

CBG: Whose idea was Humongous Man?*

Harrison: I don't recall where the germ of the idea came from; I seem to remember the work Dan and I were doing just progressed from doing pin-ups of Batman and Spider-Man to our own characters. Humongous Man started like a lot of other characters: a cool or funny drawing, lots of laughs, then a story idea started to form around it. Before we knew it there was a story and tons of drawings. From there we went to a comic-strip format, because we knew we could run it in the college newspaper here in Gainesville.

Stepp: Looking back on the work now, it's totally embarrassing. I'm happy where we ended up, though. Those originals might still be out there somewhere.

CBG: How much development has changed since then?*

Stepp: Humongous Man himself has really turned into a much more serious-looking character. His initial incarnation was pretty goofy.

Harrison: You know: big body, big chin, a smirk on his face. But now he seems very restrained; now he hardly ever smiles. We have also whittled down the costume. You know — simplify, simplify. We have distilled the "Humongous" concept down to its essence.

CBG: How do you approach the art side of things? Who does what?*

Harrison: As far as I know there aren't too many teams in comics today that have as interlaced an approach to dividing the work as Dan and I do. We both plot and script the stories and we share the art work. It goes back and forth quite a bit.

Stepp: I handle most of the pencil art and some of the backgrounds. Then Jim comes in and finishes the backgrounds and inks everything. But it's all done in a very collaborative way.

Harrison: Yeah, I'm usually telling him how to pencil and he's usually trying to tell me how to ink! [Laughter.] But really, he's right. The level of collaboration is higher than in a team where duties are very clearly defined, where the penciller turns everything over to the inker.

Stepp: Then from there, the design and the coloring of the covers, things like that, we handle together to make decisions. Jim does most of that, plus the lettering.

CBG: Since you both come from visual arts backgrounds, what's it like crafting the story? Is it difficult for you?*

Harrison: You know, it really is funny the way writers talk about being surprised that a character did this or that or that the character began to write itself. But I've already had that happen. I think when you spend the correct amount of time gestating a concept, then you try to be logical when you write — things tend to take a life of their own.

Stepp: I think Jim means considering the motivations of a character and letting those motivations guide the story in a gentle way. Then things happen that can surprise you, but they remain constant and within the realm of acceptability for a particular character.

Harrison: Yes, and something else. The single most important thing that I view differently since starting the series is that I have a complete and total appreciation for writers now. I really respect the craft and understand how difficult it can be. And I'm beginning to appreciate good writing a lot more.

Stepp: I agree. Even as an artist, I find that I can get past the art now and really concentrate on a good story, as opposed to when bad art really couldn't get me into a good story.

CBG: What are your influences?*

Stepp: Classic art and architecture. Figurative art. Everything from Rubens to the Parthenon.

Harrison: And to some extent, other sculpture and architecture from other time periods: Baroque, Egyptian, Greek.

Stepp: In terms of comics, we're heavily into a lot of the European stuff. The way they present comics there is dazzling, and the production values reflect the amount of reverence that cartoons and comics command overseas.

Harrison: And they're colored brilliantly. Lots of flat tones.

Stepp: Yes, the color theory is quite advanced. Much different from the hackneyed computer effects coloring that makes me ill. If I see another panel where everything, including the line art, is blurred to simulate speed, I'm gonna vomit.

Harrison: Other stuff we like: A lot of the Golden and Silver Age comics still hold a lot of mystique for us. The stories were just so cool, and the design, too, is perfect in its own way. We try to capture that essence sometimes for a logo or a cover but not go too far. The "retro" thing is in right now, and I see a lot of stuff that's just over the top, too much of a copy and not enough original inspiration.

Stepp: Of all the contemporary stuff, Sin City is like a textbook. Stray Bullets is pretty unbeatable, too. Alan Moore on Supreme is really clicking with the "retro" vibe. He's nailing it. And cinema. We both love movies.

Harrison: Of course, Cerebus has long been an inspiration. I'm also really into Bone, trying to understand the structure behind crafting such a long story but telling it in funny, digestible little chunks. I also think Replacement God by Zander Cannon is fantastic. He is working on the eighth issue, I think, but by the second issue he was already cooking with fire.

Stepp: It's all about taking what interests you and making it your own — distilling the essence of what you enjoy about one artist and trying to instill some of that enthusiasm into your own work. You may be drawing something completely different, but the influence is there, nonetheless.

TRADERS

Trader ads are available for $40.00 each. Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 3-1/4" x 3-1/4" size. Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads.

Trader ads are available for $40.00 each. Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 3-1/4" x 3-1/4" size. Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads.

Trader Tips

The Trader ads in CBG are an easy and economical way to advertise. Simply design your ad in a space that is 8½" wide by 8½" high and send it along with payment ($40.00 per Trader space) and complete reference form to:

COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE
Advertising Department
700 E. State Street
Iola, WI 54990-0001

We'll reduce your ad to the proper size and place it in the issue(s) you request. If no specific issue(s) is requested, we'll run your ad in the next available issue.

Keep in mind that CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or symbols to Trader ads. The better your ad looks when you send it to us, the better it will look when it is reduced and published in CBG.

TRADERS

Trader ads are available for $40.00 each. Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 3-1/4" x 3-1/4" size. Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads.

In a pile of old comics I acquired recently, I found this half-page ad in Adventure Comics #386 (Nov 69). After polling the rest of the CBG staff, no one could remember seeing either The Caped Crusader or The Man of Steel on Sesame Street, although we all remembered the appearances of Spider-Man on Electric Company.

Was this an ad for a promotional idea that fizzled before it got on the air or did the World's Finest team have a little-known television appearance?

larly big deal. In fact, it's kind of embarrassing, since most kids get to have a normal parent. Still, they do manage to benefit from it every now and then. At conventions they go around to the dealers, find stuff they want, and say, "Hi, we're Peter David's daughters. Can you give us a break on the price?" Usually works.

☞ This has nothing to do with the Heroes Con at all, but I thought I'd mention that — available in the Disney store — is a new plush line based on George of the Jungle. It ties in with the live action film, but — having learned their lesson from those awful Fred Flintstone toys that looked like John Goodman — Disney execs released a line of stuffed toys based on the animated characters. I've gotten three myself: Ape, George, and Shepp the elephant (which George perches on nicely). I'll tell you, I'm not sure what the point is to making this movie, but any film which features John Cleese as the voice of Ape has got me there for opening day.

Watch out!

Peter David, writer of stuff, can be written to at To Be Continued Inc., P.O. Box 239, Bayport, NY 11705. At the tone, the time will be exactly 11:45 a.m. ... or 1:23 p.m. ... or five minutes to 4 ... or ...

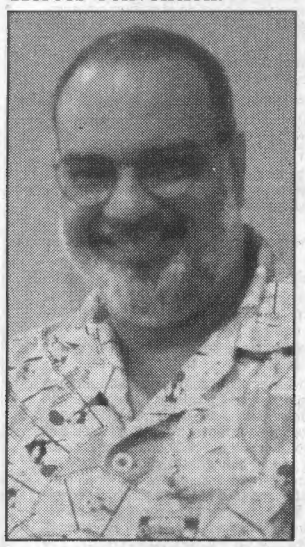
Some basic random and scattered recollections of the 1997 Heroes Convention:



George Pérez

"I finally had a chance to sit down with George Pérez and chat about an outstanding question that both of us get asked all the time ..."
— Peter David

☞ This is the first time I've been to a Heroes Con in quite some time. The last time I was there, one of the convention's centerpieces was the show's organizer, Shelton Drum, marrying his girlfriend Cynthia. This was particularly nice considering that, the time before that when I'd been there, he'd just broken up with her. Indeed, I was almost afraid to come down again since I was concerned that my merely setting foot in Charlotte would cause the marriage to blow up. Fortunately enough everything seems intact in The Family Drum, so that's a relief.

☞ I was chosen to emcee the CBG Fan Awards this year. I informed the audience that last year CBG stood for Carl Barks' Gift, but that CBG had instituted a new vote-counting method this year that would eliminate the possibility of a recurrence: I claimed that this year, in tallying the responses, CBG had simply thrown out any ballot that was not a vote for Kurt Busiek's Astro City.

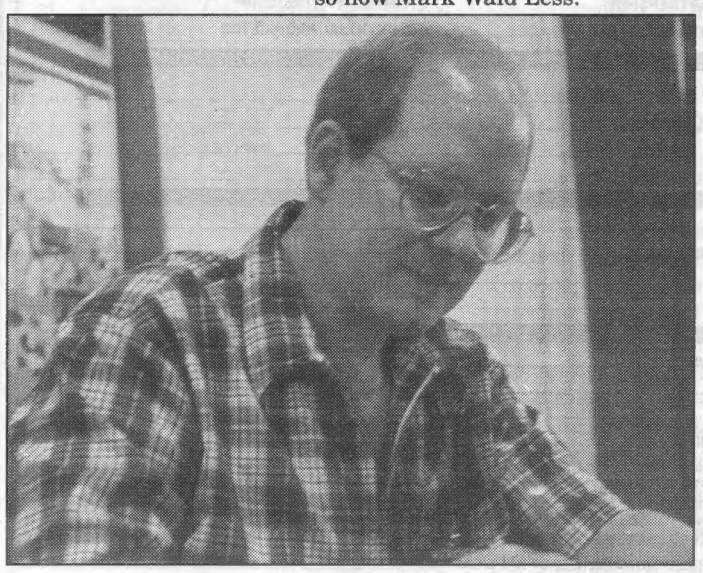
This was mildly undercut when Mark Waid won for favorite writer, but, boy, did Waid look happy about it. Or at least whoever that svelte individual passing himself off as Waid might actually be. You see, it used to be that Mark Waid More, but he lost a lot of weight, so now Mark Waid Less.



Mark Waid

☞ People brought me a lot of offbeat stuff to sign — things that I hadn't seen in years or had even completely forgotten about. Stuff like my adaptation of Cyrano de Bergerac, for instance, written for First Comics back when it had Classics Illustrated and illustrated by Kyle Baker. Boy, was that thing a pain to produce. We couldn't use the traditional James Hooker translation, because it wasn't in public domain. So I got a translation of the Edmond Rostand play produced back in the 1890s, except it wasn't very good. So I produced a new translation/adaptation using the 1890s translation, the Hooker version, a very modern translation written in current vernacular, and the original French with the aid of a French-English dictionary. Genuine labor of love. It was a ton of work, and I think First sold maybe 12 copies of it.

☞ I finally had a chance to sit down with George Pérez and chat about an outstanding question that both of us get asked all the time, namely: Will there be any more adventures of Sachs and Violens, stars of the erotic limited series we produced for Marvel's now-defunct Epic imprint. We were both happy to learn that both of us were still interested. Personally, I'd love to see J.J. Sachs become sexually involved with a randy governor who's got presidential aspirations — and his involvement with J.J. makes him a target, so his handlers decide she's got to be disposed of. That way we can call the story, "The Governor and J.J.," a joke that will be understood by almost no one, but it will amuse us, and that's what's important. Now all we need is the time in our schedule and a publisher, and we're all set.

☞ There was a great deal of fund-raising efforts going on to benefit the Comic Book Legal Defense Fund. Neil Gaiman did signings and a reading to raise money, and I handled the Saturday auction. They were not able to provide me with a microphone, since it was keyed into the public address system throughout the auditorium, which meant my voice would have boomed all through the dealers' room. But then the folks from the Jersey Rebels table provided me with a megaphone, which saved my voice. I got a laugh by testing the megaphone thus: I switched it on, tilted my head back, and — addressing the upper reaches of the ceiling — called, "Rob, don't jump! Don't jump, Rob! Come down out of the rafters! Things will get better, Rob, I promise!"

One of the auction's high points came when Paul Smith, who had been on stage during the auction producing a large sketch of characters from Leave It to Chance for another auction the following day (for the Children's Burn Victim Fund) decided to let us have it instead (with the intention of producing another for the next day's auction.) Paul watched in amazement as the bidding quickly took off, resulting in a final bid of $875. It was like watching him have an out-of-body experience.

The auction wound up raising $2600 for the CBLDF. And since Those Who Would Protect You from Yourself are becoming no less vigilant in their efforts, the money is sorely needed.

☞ I met Mike Diana, the beleaguered creator of Boiled Angel, the exile from Florida who was hit with a judgment so onerous that it was mandated he had to keep away from children under the age of 18, as if he were some sort of convicted child molester rather than simply a comics artist who told stories people didn't like. I looked for signs of horns or perhaps a 666 emblazoned on his person, but none seemed evident. But he was standing behind a table, so maybe he had cloven hooves.

What a great country we live in. Now if only we could live up to the ideals to which we aspire.

☞ I'm drowning in watches.

You see, there was this guy on Usenet who made the utterly absurd claim that the only way I will go to a convention is if I'm promised all manner of exorbitant perks, such as watches. Ostensibly (he reported) I was at a convention somewhere showing off some fancy watch that convention organizers had given me. I had, and continue to have, zero idea what he was talking about.

He also referred to Comics Buyer's Guide as my paper, prompting Tony Isabella and Bob Ingersoll to trade messages saying, "Hey, Peter bought the paper! We better be nice to the new boss! Let's go halfsies on a new watch!" This kidding exchange sent Tony's mind to working, and he started marshalling forces to give me watches. Why? I dunno. Probably my mildly beleaguered expression every time someone thrust one at me amused him or something. I wound up (literally) with half a dozen watches, the total dollar value probably coming to just under 20 bucks. There were a couple of the Burger King Lost World watches, a Hunchback of Notre Dame watch with Hugo the gargoyle on it, a Gummi watch, etc.

And not a single one of them had the right time.

But at least Tony was entertained. That's what counts.

☞ One of the reasons I hadn't made the convention in a while was that it is always over Father's Day. But this time around I wound up bringing my daughters with me, so we would be together on Father's Day (and also so they could visit their cousins who recently moved to Charlotte). Shana and Gwen actually came to the convention on Sunday. You have to understand: They don't think having me as a father is any particu-
